Bug Breaks Flight Of Miss Earhart

Insect In Her Eye Forces Halt Near Goal In California-Mexico, D. F., Trip

A bug in her eye spoiled Amelia Earhart's projected non-stop flight from Burbank, Calif., to Mexico City on April 20.

The tiny insect so blinded her, the famed conqueror of two oceans said as she arrived in the Mexican capital thirteen and one-half hours after taking-off from the California city, that she could not read her maps and had to land sixty miles short of her goal to get her bearings, according to the New York Times.

A cow pasture at Nopala, State of Hidalgo, provided an emergency landing field. There she found she was 100 miles off her course. She removed the bug, got her bearings and hopped off again for Mexico, D.F., where 10,000 persons cheered as she landed.

Disappointed Over Flight

Miss Earhart herself was disappointed at what she described as her "unsuccessful" 1,700-mile flight, intended to increase good-will between Mexico and the United States.

As soon as she sees something of Mexico, she said shortly after landing at 1:27 p.m. she "will try to do a better job of flying non-stop to New York." She also said she hoped to attempt the California-Mexico flight again.

Wildly applauded on her arrival by the largest crowd at the air port since Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh arrived in 1927, Miss Earhart said the forced landing delayed her at least a half-hour. She averaged about 140 miles an hour.

The chief feature of the trip for her, Miss Earhart said, was the stolidity of some Mexican cows which refused to move when she circled the field at Nopala. The cows in Ireland, she commented, were much more obliging, turning tail and fleeing when she landed there on her Atlantic hop.

"I enjoyed perfect weather all the way," she related, "but regret my failure.

"After leaving Burbank a motor heated alarmingly, apparently due to the faulty pitch of the propeller, but later it cooled down. This morning I was forced to use a hand pump to restore the gasoline pressure and while I was working with one hand a bug flew into my eye, making it impossible to read my maps, although I knew approximately where I was.

"I finally spotted a dry lake bed where cows were grazing and after circling several times I came down.

"Within a few minutes at least fifty cowboys, together with women and children, surrounded the plane, and with their aid I got my bearings. although none spoke English and I was unacquainted with Spanish. Strangely, they knew who I was.

"In approximately half an hour I succeeded in taking off with considerable difficulty because curious spectators kept getting in my way.

"It's silly that a bug caused me to fail, but I intend to return and make a perfect flight."

Spectators here, part of whom left when the forced landing was announced, broke through the lines of soldiers guarding the air-field and rushed toward the big red monoplane when it touched ground. The crowd had jammed the air field all morning.

A gasp went up from the throng when an announcement from the Presidential office stated that she had made a brief landing at Nopala. After a brief wait the announcement was rectified, but the new statement still did not make clear what had happened to Miss Earhart.

A group of military planes that had set out to escort her to a landing returned, unable to locate her. Then another announcement gave the information that the aviatrix had taken off for the capital again.

Among those who waited patiently for the overdue flier were Foreign Minister Portes Gil and members of the Mexican Cabinet and of the diplomatic corps. After her plane had roared to a landing the Foreign Minister presented a bouquet of flowers to Miss Earhart on behalf of the President of Mexico.

According to her own calculations, Miss Earhart made the 1,700-mile trip in 13 hours 32 minutes, including the stop of a half hour in Nopala.

Panama Appeals To Roosevelt

Minister Alfaro Takes Case Of Gold Payment To White House On Government's Order

A direct appeal to President Roosevelt for the United States to pay the annual rental of $250,000 for the Panama Canal in gold coin of the standard of 1904, as prescribed in the treaty of that year, was made recently by Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro, Minister of Panama, by direction of his President, Harmodio Arias, says the New York Times.

Dr. Alfaro was presented to the President by Sumner Welles, Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Latin-American affairs. The result of the conference was not announced. The Minister said that any statement for his government would be made by President Arias. The White House and Mr. Welles were silent.

On the last two payment days the United States tendered checks for $250,000 in devalued dollars, whereas the treaty calls for gold coin of the standard of 1904. The checks were returned.

Other Negotiations Involved

Other questions also have been under negotiation by Dr. Arias and a mission from his country with Mr. Welles and other State Department officials for six months in efforts to draft another and basic treaty to replace that of 1904.

Involved are radio problems, the right of the United States to buy more land for canal purposes from Panama, if desired, arbitration of claims and a number of miscellaneous matters in the relationships of the two republics, some of which were discussed in the White House conference today.

It is understood that the canal rental as prescribed by treaty was not paid because of advice to the White House by the Treasury and Justice Departments arising out of general policies flowing from dollar devaluation. Had State Department wishes been followed, it is believed that payments would have been made as prescribed because of the broad issues of good faith and possible repercussions from a breach of treaty in the conduct of foreign affairs.

President Desires Settlement

Although reporting that President Roosevelt expressed a desire to settle the difficulties arising over the canal payments, Dr. Alfaro, the Panaman Minister, who called at the White House at his government's request, did not appear particularly optimistic that the call would accomplish speedy results.

Asked if the negotiations were likely to be suspended after more than six months' efforts to reach an agreement, Dr. Alfaro said that anything might happen, but that he would not yet call the case hopeless.

Plainly indicating his government's dissatisfaction with the delay, Dr. Alfaro today said Panama was seeking liberation from an unequal and outdated treaty, and drew a comparison between his country and Germany in relation to the Treaty of Versailles.

His government, he said, was in somewhat the same position as Germany in seeking relief from this treaty, except that While the Versailles treaty was imposed upon defeated Germany, the treaty with Panama was negotiated at the time when Panama came to the rescue of the United States for development and completion of the Panama Canal. The Panama Government, he added, might make an announcement soon.

Dr. Alfaro said that service on about $11,000,000 of Panamanian bonds held in the United States was due about May 15, and that his government would be unable to meet the interest payments unless the United States met its annuity of $250,000, which now is two years in default.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Champion Cook and Faster

Guilleaume Tirel Taillevent (1315-1395) was chef de cuisine (chief cook), to King Charles V and King Philip VI of France. He wrote the first cook book in the French language and is considered the father of French food. Oddly enough he was not only the high priest of the royal table but a champion faster. He died and was buried in St. Germain-en-Laye, near Paris. His tombstone, which is preserved at the Museum of St. Germain, enumerates several amazing fasting feats of the Grand Chef. According to this tombstone, he once lived on an exclusive diet of water for 90 days, and a year later he sustained himself on an exclusive diet of oil for 2 months. He lived to the advanced age of 80.

British Heir's Visit Drew Big Contract From Brazil

The Prince of Wales, who has often been called "Britain's best traveling salesman," dropped a hint recently during a dinner of the Iron and Steel Federation that in conjunction with the government he might during his journeys have been "somewhat instrumental in obtaining a number of contracts."

A few minutes later the Earl of Dudley, chairman of the federation, revealed it was as a result of an interview that the Prince had with authorities at Rio de Janeiro that a contract worth £3,000,000, for electrification of part of the Central Railway of Brazil came to Britain, says the New York Times.

The contract, which was awarded to Metropolitan-Vickers, Ltd., was signed at Rio de Janeiro in March.

Big Gains In Aviation Forecast By Engineers

most ingenious device, it floats with its deck 100 feet above water, supported by columns that extend below the water to float chambers. These floats being beneath the surface, do not move with the waves so the landing platform is steady even in high seas.

Some 1200 feet long by 300 feet wide, equipped with repair shops, hotels, motion picture theaters, tennis courts and shops, these seadromes or floating islands would make cross-ocean aviation simple since the plans call for placing them every 400 miles. With a radio beacon on each, there "would be nothing to" navigation.

And they might serve other purposes. They could carry radio repeating stations so that telephone messages across the ocean would be as simple as now across land. With radio only having to reach 400 miles in a jump the noise and fading of present cross-ocean radio telephony would be overcome.

"Outgrown" Before Started

But the stratosphere flying is coming so fast that the seadrome to some has become a symbol of the amazing rapidity of aviation's growth. Before the first one can be built, they say, aviation outgrows them with stratosphere flying. Stratosphere planes will need only one hop to reach Europe and they will be so high that it won't be feasible to return to the earth's surface in mid-ocean.

Perhaps this is true. But then again there might be opportunities for both seadromes and stratosphere flying. For instance it would be desirable for the stratosphere plane to know that spotted every 400 miles of the journey a floating island could be found in case of an emergency. Passengers, particularly in the early stages of this type of flying, would find the idea comforting.

Then again express and freight could be carried by airplane at lower levels, making the trip in a day or two as against six hours in the stratosphere. Then again these islands would be convenient for ocean shipping, for supplying weather reports, for radio beams and for navigation generally. Aviation is likely to be such a multi-purpose art that it can use all types of ships and all types of landing fields, floating islands, etc.

May Miss Railway Age

Indeed those relatively new countries such as Russia and China may almost entirely miss the railroad age. They may make the transition from ox cart to airplane with no intervening links. Why build great steel railroad tracks for thousands of miles over the Russian steppes or Chinese hills and plains when an airplane can fly over them at higher speed and less investment?

Even freight has been carried successfully by airplanes. Russian engineers figure that with slow flying at 125 miles an hour—that is slow compared with present passenger plane speeds—aviation can be made to carry goods as cheaply as railroads—when there is no existing investment in railroads, rights of way, bridges and tunnels.

We have said little of the men behind these works. There is little to be said. Aviation engineers are particularly self-effacing gentlemen. They want only one thing to speak for them—the performance of their ships. When we look at the Douglas ships, the Graf Zeppelin and the stratosphere work of Wiley Post, we can only say their works do speak out loudly and clearly. But behind today's applause are years of discouragement due to lack of funds, lack of public interest against which they struggled gamely before they reached today's recognition of aviation. These far-visioned gentlemen are not only self-effacing—they are courageous.

J.D. Barnum Heads Publishers' Group

Syracuse Man Succeeds Davis As President—Calls Free Press The Chief Problem Now

Jerome D. Barnum, publisher of The Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard, was elected president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association recently at the annual meeting of members at the Waldorf-Astoria, recently closing the forty-ninth annual convention of the association, says the New York Times.

Mr. Barnum, who was vice president of the association last year, succeeds Howard Davis, business manager of The New York Herald Tribune, who retired after three one-year terms as president. Mr. Davis, as retiring president, automatically became a member of the board of directors for a two-year term.

Other officers elected yesterday were: Vice president—James G. Stahlman of The Nashville (Tenn.) Banner; secretary—E. H. Harris of The Richmond (Ind.) Palladium-Item (re-elected); treasurer—Walter M. Dear of The Jersey Journal of Jersey City, N. J. (re-elected).

Board Members Re-elected

Four members of the board whose two-year terms expired yesterday were re-elected. They are F. J. Burd of The Vancouver (B. C.) Daily Province, W. G. Chandler of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, W. C. Macfarlane of The Chicago Tribune and Charles H. Taylor of The Boston Globe.

All the elections were unanimous.

Mr. Barnum in his acceptance speech said the unity of newspapers had never been so close as now and pledged his administration to serve the best interests of the A. N. P. A. and the individual newspapers.

In an interview with reporters, Mr. Barnum said:

"The main problem of the newspapers today is to maintain the freedom of the press. The work so ably initiated and successfully carried through in the past five years by Howard Davis will be continued in so far as I am humanly able to do it."

The reference to Mr. Davis's five-year work included two years in which he was vice-president of the association before becoming president.

Postal Report Is Adopted

The publishers adopted the report of the Postal Committee, headed by Mr. Stahlman, which opposed increase in rates for mailing newspapers, denied that newspapers were subsidized by the Postoffice and denied that the Postoffice was losing money in handling newspapers. It said that years of study refuted charges that newspaper postal rates were too low.

The committee also reported on its successful efforts to have rescinded, effective July 1, a Postoffice order that permitted the mailing by direct-by-mail houses of unaddressed matter not only on rural routes but also in cities and villages where there is carrier delivery.

In its argument that the Postoffice does not lose money in its handling of newspapers, the report said:

"The Postoffice Department handles but a relatively small amount of daily newspaper distribution today as compared with other and private distributing agencies, either owned by publishers or used by them. Practically no afternoon newspapers use the postoffice for other than purely incidental distribution, and during the last fifteen years, as roads have been improved, morning newspapers have been withdrawing their circulation from the mails.

"The reasons are apparent. The afternoon newspapers, by using other agencies, can get distribution on the day of publication at from one-third to one-half of the postoffice cost, as against distribution on the following day through the post-office at a higher cost.

"The morning newspapers are likewise availing themselves of the cheaper methods of distribution.

"Further, the Postoffice Department is unable to offer different services, and has almost wholly lost the remunerative bundle business, which has gone to baggage and express companies, where trains are used.

"Diminished train service is another factor which has forced publishers to turn to other agencies.

"As for the papers still left in the mail, these facts are pertinent; more than 90 per cent of them are distributed on rural routes.

"The average haul is less than 100 miles. More than 50 per cent are not even transported by the Postoffice Department from the city of publication to the points from which they carried at the expense of the publisher to these offices. The Post office Department does no routing, sorting or bundling. This is done by publishers. If every newspaper now delivered on rural routes was diverted therefore, the routes would be maintained for first third and fourth class mail service.

"Bearing in mind the facts about newspaper distribution, it is important to remember that, in so far as transportation charge are concerned, the department bases all of its costs on a hypothetical railroad cost. The department's own figures show that for transportation it pays to the railroads 37½ cents per hundred pounds per 150 miles, whereas it charge the publisher $1.75 per hundred pounds per 150 miles.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Great-Great Great-Grandmother

In my cartoon of yesterday I drew little Dranna Hendriaks and her great-great-great-grandmother, Katrina Ruiters, of Port Elizabeth, South Africa. Baby Dranna is the sixth generation of her family, all living. She is three years old, her mother is 22, her grandmother 43, her great-grandmother 63, great-great-grandmother 84, and the oldest generation of the long line is over 100. This record, which I found while visiting South Africa in 1933, is probably unbeaten anywhere in the world.

Man Who Knows The Numbers

If anyone asks Charles Zimmerly of Williamsport, Md., the auto license of any car or truck he has ever seen, he can give it immediately, and also describe the car and tell in which state it is registered. Zimmerly has a peculiar flare for this ability to file away numbers in his head and has mentally indexed more than 1500 cars.

Chinese Army To Adopt Reich System, Says Tu

Rengo

BERLIN, May 10—"The Chinese Army will be reorganized on the model of the Germany Army," declared General Tu Chi-chen, Chief of the Military Academy at Canton, in an interview with the press here today. The officer has been staying here for two months and a half for the purpose of studying the organization of the Reich's army.

General Tu further said that he was especially struck by the efficiency of the army and the air force, which the visiting officer described as the most modern in the world.

GOVERNOR'S RECEPTION

The Governor of Kanagawa prefecture and Madam K. Ishida have issued invitations to an at home from 3:30 to 5 p.m. Tuesday, May 28 at the governor's official residence, Momijigaoka Naka-ku, Yokohama.

EDUCATORS MARRIED

On May 16, Dr. L. S. G. Miller, Dean of Kyushu Gakuin, Kumamoto, and Miss Martha Harder, head of the Music Department of Kyushu Jogakuin, were married by the Rev. Dr. C. W. Hepner, president of the Lutheran Mission in Japan, assisted by the Rev. Inadomi, and the Rev. Ishimatsu. The wedding ceremony was held in the chapel of the Kyushu Jogakuin, and was followed by a reception which was attended by over two hundred guests.

The chancel of the chapel was decorated with lilies and ferns. The bride's dress was of pale blue lace and she wore a blue picture hat. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses, lilies, carnations, baby's breath and daisies. Her sister, Miss Helene Harder, who was her maid of honor, wore an orchid chiffon dress with a picture hat to match, and carried a bouquet of orchids and baby's breath.

The wedding march was played by one of the music teachers of the girls' school, and a union choir of all the Kumamoto churches sang the words of Ruth to Naomi, just before the vows were taken: "Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

VOCAL RECITAL

The first recital since her marriage a year ago will be given by Mrs. Ayoko Ota at the Nippon Seinenkai hall, Aoyama, at 7:30 p.m. June 3.

Mrs. Ota, formerly Miss Ayako Ogino, soprano, studied in Paris and was a professor at the Tokyo Academy of Music. At her recital, she will sing selections by Messrs. Y. Hirai, A. Mitsukuri, K. Yamada, N. Sugawara, Y. Kiyose, S. Fukai, N. Ito, Y. Hasegawa, and several other Japanese composers.

AT TAKASHIMAYA

The 7th annual exhibition of the Kojinsha Decorative Art Society is being held at the Takashimaya department store. It will continue to Sunday.

SAILED TODAY

The Kokusai Kisen Kaisha motor vessel Kurama maru sailed today from Yokohama for the United States, carrying the following passengers: Mr. O. Faulkner, Mining Engineer; Messrs. M. H. Garrard, R. P. Alexander and S. Shimada, Missionaries; Mr. T. Ohyama, Mr. S. Tamura, Mr. S. Sugimori and Mr. O. Hirota.

RETURNS TO TOKYO

Mrs. Youreneff, wife of the Ambassador of the U.S.S.R., returned to Tokyo Sunday after a week's vist at Atami.

NEW SYMPHONY CONCERT

The 156th periodical recital of the New Symphony Orchestra will be held at the Hibiya Public Hall, Friday at 7:30 p.m. The orchestra will play under direction of Viscount Hidemaro Konoye, the Overture to the Opera "Ruslan and Ludmila" by Glinka and the "Moldau" symphonic poem No. 2 by Smetana. Mr. Efrem Zimbalist, world famous violin virtuoso, will play the violin concert No. 2, by Bach and the violin concerto Op. 64 by Meldelssohn with the orchestra accompaniment.

SOCIETY RECITAL

The tenth recital of the Akatombo Music Society will be held at the Nippon Seinenkai Hall, Aoyama, on May 30 at 6:30 p.m. The society is an organization of the pupils of Mr. Takemitsu Kobayashi. They will play some violin and piano ensembles.

ANNUAL MEETING

The International Ladies Benevolent Association of Tokyo will hold its annual meeting at 4 p.m. Wednesday at Holy Trinity church.

MRS. CRULL ARRIVES

Mrs. W. Crull arrived in Yokohama Sunday to join her husband, Dr. Crull, new German Consul-General.

GRADUATES HONORED

Graduates of the American School in Japan will be honored at a banquet given by the Parent-Teachers Association at 5:30 p.m. June 14 at the school.

CHURCH SUPPER

The Women's Society of the Tokyo Union church will give the last church supper before the summer vacation at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday. A special program has been planned.

TAIWAN PICTURED

Oil paintings of Taiwan's beauty are being shown by Mr. Toranosuke Takahashi, well known painter, at the Nichido Art Galleries, Sukiyabashi. Mr. Takahashi, member of the Pacific Art Society, has spent several months in Taiwan. His exhibit will continue to Friday.

N. B. R. MEETING

Mrs. Hazel Gorham will speak on "Oriental and Occidental Ways of Looking at the Garden" at the meeting of the Nippon Cultural Federation at 5 p.m. Thursday in the New Osaka building.

STUDY CLUB

Dr. Prussek of the Japan Czechoslovakia Society addressed the 7th meeting of the International Study club at the Yamato restaurant Saturday evening.

The Czech people, said Dr. Prussek, once were a free and hardy people, developing a high and unique culture. Their ambitions and ideals were not of a material sort, however, and philosophers preached being rather than having. So it came about that the Czech and Slovak lands and peoples were put under the domination of other powers. Only with the World War came liberation and the rebirth of national characteristics and contributions.

"Today Czechoslovakia is in the middle of an intriguing problem," he continued. "On the one hand is the communism of Russia, offering a program of justice, both social and economic, but without a completely worked out plan and including violence in its method. On the other is the Fascism of Italy and Germany, with its false standards of racial egotism and its inevitable and lamentable regimentation.

"Czechoslovakia has chosen democracy, however, and her leaders, Masaryk and Benes, are trying to persist in principles of cooperation and freedom."

Officers of the club present responded with questions and further discussion of the customs and institutions of Czechoslovakia and their relations with things Japanese. These included Dr. Beatty, legal adviser to the foreign office, and Professor Yatsu, of the Imperial University. Presiding were Mr. Sahijiro Murata and Mr. Herbert Wilson, secretaries of the International Study Club.

Y. C. & A. C. PLAY

Members of the Y. C. & A. C. will present a musical comedy and revue, "Fads and Fancies" at the club Saturday evening, June 1. Dancing will follow the show. A dress rehearsal will be given for children on Thursday, May 30.

STILLMAN SAILING

Mr. Ralph Stillman of the National City Bank will sail Friday for a vacation in the United States.

ON SUMMER VACATION

Lieut. and Mrs. Alexander Geroge and family will leave this evening for Nojiri where they will spend the summer. Upon their return in the fall, they will move into the home now occupied by Mrs. M. W. Pettigrew at Shirokane Daimachi.

DINNER PARTY

Dinner guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Elon Olney Monday evening were Mrs. John Curts, Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Coe, Mr. and Mrs. Hayden of the National City Bank from Bombay, who are now enroute home Mr. and Mrs. James R. Young, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Brown, Miss Tonie Wong, Mr. Ralph Stillman, Mrs. Boyden from Peiping, and Mr. Thomas Davis and Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Standish from Yokohama.

AT NEW OSAKA

New arrivals at the Hotel New Osaka are: Mr. Shoko Kosaka, Mr. Sanhiro Ando, Lt. and Mrs. S. Malina, Mr. Yoshio Goi, Mr. Masaichi Takada, Mr. Yoji Kondo, Mr. Takaharu Yamazaki, Mr. Shinichi Nagazawa and Mother, Mr. Kunikichi Miyazaki, Mr. Shoji Gondo, Mr. Kumema Okura, Mr. Kazuo Kaizu, Mrs. C. Orwitz, Dr. S. D. Orwitz, Mr. V. Orwitz, Mr. Tanido Koyama, Mr. Moichi Mizutani, Mr. and Mrs. Shogo Kimoto, Mr. Kimoto's Sitting Room.

Mr. and Mrs. Seisuki Yamada, Mr. Taisuke Haraguchi, Mr. Sadatoshi Nomoto, Mr. Satoru Onoo, Mr. Shigemori Nizo, Mr. Bungo Kikuchi, Mr. Hideo Sawahara, Mr. Tanizo Koyama, Mr. and Mrs. Narukatsu Hirase, Mr. Heijiro Ito, Mr. Matao Kobayakawa, Mr. and Mrs. Shonen Katsumura, Mr. Giichi Takamasa, Mr. Toshiyuki Hirakawa, Mr. Toshiro Doi, Mr. Toshio Aizawa, Mr. P. P. V. Kabdon, Mr. Kan Takamura.

Mr. Kazo Takamura, Mr. Kyusaburo Tada, Mr. Geo. Allan, Mr. Toiji Komatsu, Mr. Yuso Tougami, Mr. Soji Ino, Mr. Taisuke Hasegawa, Mr. and Mrs. Shidenobu Shima, Mr. Manaji Okubo, Mr. Jusuke Matsumoto, Mr. Bunsen Yamaguchi, Mr. M. Schapiro, Mr. Sho Inoue, Mr. Chuji Uchiyama, Mr. Bunji Shibata, Mr. Kin Toda, Mr. Kunisaburo Tanaka.

Mr. Takeo Ito, Mr. C. L. Moor, Mr. T. Harney, Mr. and Mrs. Ichita Kobashi, Mr. Seikichi Maruoka, Mrs. Isuko Okuda, Mr. and Mrs. Manabu Ito, Mr. Tsunetaro Tsuda, Mr. Seiichi Murakami, Mr. and Mrs. Fusa Tomari, Mr. Goro Matsukata, Mr. Kimitoshi Nishino, Mr. Eikichi Yamada, Mr. Shiuichiro Ochi, Mrs. Hidoko Inoue, Mr. Kantaro Homma, Mr. Toshijiro Saito, Mr. Hideo Kusama.

AT MAMPEI

New arrival at the Mampei hotel are: Mr. Robert Perrier from Paris, Mr. Thomas Draper from America, Mr. Hadelin Andrimont from Belgium, Mr. Alan Cohen from England, Mr. Henri Melchior from France, Mrs. Bartha Schweitzer from America, Mr. Paul Mueller from Germany, Mr. Thomas J. Crowley from America, Mr. E. Fostinis from Greece, Mr. H. B. Welander from Sweden, Mr. Hamilton-Browne from England, Mr. D. Zenzinger from Czechoslovakia, Mr. Chotalal M. Mehta from England, Mr. G. S. Cox head from England, and Mrs. M. Danis.

Energy Multiplied 200,000,000 Times

Yield From Atom Increased By Columbia Men To That Ratio Over Force Applied

The release of atomic energy 200,000,000 times greater than the amount of energy applied was reported at Washington recently by physicists of Columbia University before the American Physical Society. The development was hailed as the greatest advance so far toward the practical utilization of the inconceivably large quantities of energy known to be locked in the heart of atoms, says we New York Times.

Neutrons slowed to travel with energies of one-fortieth of a volt were shot straight into the hearts of lithium atoms with such accuracy and destructive force that the lithium atom yielded up energy corresponding to 5,000,000 volts, a yield of 200,000,000 per cent on the original investment.

This is a million times greater than the largest amount of atomic energy obtained by other methods, it was reported.

Two Health Discoveries

Together with this discovery, which at last gives to science a much clearer glimpse from a metaphorical Pisagah, into the promised land of practically infinite atomic energy for the free use of man, the Columbia scientists announced two other far-reaching finds in the field, which may have equally important bearing on human health as they have on the field of power.

After many fruitless efforts, it was announced, the "taming of the neutron," enfant terrible of the atomic world, the most powerfully penetrating yet at the same time the most unruly particle in the world of matter, has at last been accomplished.

At last science has been able to put "a harness and saddle" on it and to make it go in any direction man desires it to go.

This control of the neutron has a double significance. Hitherto neutrons could not be made to go in a particular direction, a majority of these powerful "bullets" being wasted. Now the greater part of them may be fired at the desired target, the heart of the atom, with an uncanny accuracy that would do credit to any expert marksman.

The work was carried on at the Columbia University physics department by Drs. J. R. Dunning, G. B. Pegram, G. A. Fink and D. P. Mitchell. Dr. Dunning presented the report.

Hint Provided by Fermi

The first hint of a means for "taming" the neutron was obtained last December by Professor Enrico Fermi of Rome, Italy, eminent physicist who succeeded several months ago in artificially creating Element 93, an element beyond uranium, which is the last and heaviest element on the Periodic Table.

Ordinary neutrons travel with tremendous speeds and were found to be absolutely "wild." Professor Fermi tried to establish that by slowing them down, they might be controlled. He made them pass through a thick sphere of paraffin before allowing them to hit the ultimate target.

The neutrons catapulted straight through the paraffin as was expected, but in doing so they were forced to expend a great deal of their energy.

The loss of energy meant, of course, a corresponding loss of speed, so that the neutrons hit their atomic target with much slower speed. Neutrons thus retarded were named "slow neutrons."

Results "Spectacular"

Professor Fermi had found that by using "slow neutrons" as atomic "bullets" he received many more direct atomic hits square into the heart of atoms, with an accompanying greater release of atomic energy, than had ben possible when fast neutrons were used as bullets.

Taking the clue from Professor Fermi, the Columbia physicists proceeded even more earnestly to tame the neutron by the process of slowing it down. The results they obtained were even more spectacular than they had dared to hope, they stated.

Drs. Dunning and Pegram further discovered—and this was very startling indeed—that the hearts of the atoms literally expanded enormously in their diameters when a "slow neutron" was approaching them.

This "atomic heart expansion" was found to vary greatly with the atoms of the various elements. The hearts of some elements, such as trons—that is, to make them travel carbon, for example, remained rather cold to the advances of the slow neutron, while others expanded in staggering proportions.

The heart of hydrogen, it was found, becomes eight times as large for a slow neutron as it is for a fast one; the heart of lithium becomes thirty times as large, while that of boron becomes 500 times as large.

The amount of the enlargement of "the atom heart" means, of course, the corresponding enlargement in the same ratio of the effective target. Shooting at a target enlarged 500 times means, naturally, the improvement of the chances of a direct hit by the same amount.

The nucleus of the atom seems to act as a "bullseye magnet" for the slow neutron. It literally seems to draw the "slow neutron" straight to its very centre. And in doing so it literally "commits suicide" and yields up all its vast energy in one terrific burst.

The most startling display of "suicidal mania" was found in the case of the cadmium atom. When a slow neutron advances toward it the cadmium nucleus becomes enlarged 10,000 times in its diameter as compared with its size on the approach of a fast neutron. The chances of a slow neutron hitting the nucleus of the cadmium atom, as compared with the chances of a fast neutron, are as 10,000 to 1.

The new discovery changes radically the existing picture of the possibilities of using atomic energy. There is enough atomic energy in a piece of coal the size of a pea to drive the largest liner across the Atlantic and back.

Science at last has found a "key for the cupboard," as Sir Arthur Eddington called it, of the vast store of energy locked up within the atom.

The Columbia scientists have also undertaken to determine if "cooling" of "slow neutrons" has an effect. The results are so recent, obtained only a few days ago, that their report was only preliminary.

More Effective When Cold

They found that "cold slow neutrons" are even more effective as atomic "range-finders" than "hot slow neutrons."

Using lithium as a target they found that the percentage of direct hits for "cold neutrons" was, respectively, 10, 4 and 9 per cent greater than the direct hits, large as they were, obtained by the use of "hot neutrons."

To cool off the neutrons the scientists made them pass through an atmosphere of liquid air.

While a neutron will penetrate three to four centimeters of lead, going right through and being wasted in space, it is stopped by a thin plate of cadmium. It is this discovery that promises to be of considerable importance in the field of health.

This absorption power of cadmium for neutrons makes it possible, Dr. Dunning stated, to make tubes of cadmium for "canalizing" the neutrons in a directional beam through a slit, as it done in the case of X-rays and light.

ing.

The ceremony of conferring citizenship will be a "solemn act." Prospective citizens will have to take an oath of allegiance to the German people, the Reich and Der Reichsfuehrer.

Girls "State Subjects"

Dr. Frick did not state the regulations to be made regarding women, but recalled that Hitler in his book declared that German girls were to be considered "state subjects" until married. Hitler made an exception, however, of women engaged in business, concerning whom he wrote that "they may be granted the right of citizenship."

Dr. Frick's announcement that the enemies of the Nazi state will be deprived of their citizenship is regarded in political circles here as a warning to the opposition pastors of the Protestant Church (the so-called Confessional Synod, opposed to Reich Bishop Ludwig Mueller and the "German Christian" Church) that they will be adjudged men without a country unless they submit to the authority of the Nazi primate.

Dr. Frick said: "It is no secret that the German government is planning new laws concerning German state citizenship. My ministry is drafting a bill along Hitler's lines. It is evident that this law will put into effect the principles of Hitler's movement. The new right of citizenship imposes more critical standards on everybody who is or who wants to be a German citizen.

"German citizenship in future no longer will be acquired purely by birth, or by the customary administrative act or payment of a sum of money, as formerly was the case, when one could obtain citizenship very much as one would obtain membership in a club.

Citizenship Highest

"German citizenship, according to the will of Der Fuehrer, will be the highest right, and papers conferring citizenship will be the most precious documents that a German can acquire in his whole life. German citizenship must be an honor which a member of the German race can obtain only by service for the people and the state.

"The road to all public offices in the party and the state will be open to every German only if the bearer will enter in the fighting under the movement, in the service and the honor of the people and the Reich as an arms bearer of the nation.

"German citizenship will be confirmed as a solemn act and holy oath to the German commonwealth and the German Fuehrer, and it will be denied to all unworthy persons and all enemies of the state."

IWAYA
REFRIGERATORS

The days when the refrigerator was considered a luxury have gone forever.

Today the refrigerator is not only a household necessity but also a hygienic requirement since preservation of foodstuffs is essential to good health. Essential in a refrigerator is that it be well insulated from heat and soundly built for long use.

Many refrigerators look alike when viewed from the outside, but there is all the difference in the world when it comes to performance. No one can risk purchasing just a refrigerator, without being assured of its substantial quality and correct design. This is only possible when one purchases such a refrigerator as the IWAYA, a name which has behind it long years of experience and the confidence of the public as the premier, as well as pioneer, builder of refrigerators in Japan.

In keeping with modern requirements, the IWAYA Refrigerator Company have placed on the market their all steel models. The exterior is rust proof and of white lacquer, the interior of the finest enamel finish. Complete insulation is guaranteed and perfect circulation of pure dry air at low temperatures with minimum ice consumption. In appearance IWAYA Refrigerators are most attractive an asset to any household. Be sure that refrigerator is not any refrigerator, but bears the name IWAYA.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

336-Yard Hole-In-One

Jimmy Nichols, one-armed professional at the Valdoste, Georgia Country Club, is a Believe It Not golfer in many ways. In 1929 Nichols lost his right arm in a tie race with a railroad train in Fort Worth, Texas, but that didn't spoil his golf the least bit. Believe It or Not—he plays with his left arm, using right hand clubs and stance; he goes around regularly in par on any course, many times in less than par; and has made four holes-in-one, the most remarkable of which was the 336-yard ace on the Douglas, Georgia, course, December 1933. That's overcoming the handicaps!

The Smallest "National" Park

What is believed to be the smallest government park in the world, though not officially a United States National Park, is the "Rock of the Cross" Park in Missouri. It is situated on a precipitous island on the Missouri side of the Mississippi River near Wittenburg, Mo., topped by a few trees growing in the solid rock. Legend has it that before the coming of white settlers, the Indians looked upon this rock as the abode of evil spirits, probably because their canoes were so often dashed to pieces in the dangerous currents surging around it. A proposal to blast away the island and use the rock for commercial purposes was thwarted by President Grant, who wanted it set aside as a national park.

Social and Personal Notes

JUNE WEDDING

Miss Ruth Murphy of New York city and Mr. Charles Hutchinson of the American consulate in Tokyo, will be married Wednesday, June 8 at the home of the American Consul-General and Mrs. Arthur Garrels.

Miss Murphy will arrive in Yokohama on the General Lee next Wednesday, May 29 and will be a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Garrels. Details of the wedding plans are being left until after the arrival of Miss Murphy, but according to present arrangements, the wedding will be small and will be followed by a larger reception at which members of the American Embassy and others will be guests. Bishop Reifsnider will read the marriage service. Following a wedding trip, the bride and groom will live at Shinsaka machi.

DIPLOMATIC LEADERS GIVEN GARDEN PARTY

A garden party was given by the Minister of the Imperial Household, Mr. Kurahei Yuasa, at the Detacehd Palace of Hama, in honor of the diplomatic corps in Tokyo, at 3 p.m. Monday.

The diplomatic corps was headed by Baron de Bassompierre, Belgian Ambassador. The Ambassadors from Great Britain, the United States of America, France, Italy and China, and the Ministers from Holland, Czechoslovakia and other countries, and their wives attended the party. Representing the Imperial Household Minister and other higher officials of the Ministry participated.

The Detached Palace, the scene of the international affair, appeared at its very best, with many a flower of late spring and early summer out to dazzle the eye of on-lookers. The foreigners and the Japanese alike were entertained at many "shops" specially prepared for the occasion in the compound of the Palace. The guests also delighted in the "raku-yaki", the unique art of the amateur-craftsman of Japan. The party dispersed at 5 p.m.

EXHIBITION CLOSING

The exhibtion of rare art treasures of Japan which is being held under the acspices of the Hochi Shinbun at the Tokyo Prefectural Art Galleries, Uyeno park, will be closed Thursday.

PHOTOGRAPHS TO BE SEEN

The first international exhibition of the Tokyo Salon of Photography will open at the Imperial Art Museum Friday and will continue to June 2. The salon is aiming to show high class work in pictorial photography in which there is evidence of personal artistic feeling and execution.

TOURIST TALK

"The Greatest Things in the World As Seen by a tourist" is the topic of an address to be given by Mr. Herbert Salmon at the meeting of the English Speaking Society at the Tokyo Y.M.C.A. at 6:30 p.m. today.

IN SANITARIUM

Miss Anna Berry of Aoyama Gakuin who injured her arm and shoulder in a fall on Monday, is now at the Ogikubo Sanitarium for a few days.

WINS HONOR

Miss Jeane Hoekje, daughter of Dr. W. G. Hoekje of Meiji Gakuin, has been elected to the National Honor Society of the United States, an organization for high school students who excell in scholarship, leadership, and character. Miss Hoekji is a student in the Kalamazoo, Michigan, high school.

LEAVING SUNDAY

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Worden of New York city who have been visiting in Tokyo, will leave Sunday for Miyanoshita, Kyoto, Nara, and the Inland Sea. They will return to Tokyo June 5 and sail on June 6. On their way home, Mr. Worden will attend the annual meeting of the American Bar Association of which he is a prominent member. Mr. and Mrs. Worden are active members of the Japan-America society in New York. For 25 years he was secretary and now he is honorary secretary of that organization. This is the Worden's second trip to Japan and they are being entertained by many friends here.

AT ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL

Mrs. L. V. Allen is convalescing following an operation at St. Luke's International Medical Center and will not be able to see visitors for about 10 days.

RETURN FROM KWANSAI

Following a few days trip to the Kansai, the American Assistant Naval Attache, Lieut. Ethelbert Watts, Lieut. F. Lee, naval aviator, the American Assistant Military Attache Captain John Weckerling and Colonel Sneed, have returned to Tokyo.

THANKS EXPRESSED

Mr. M. J. Cox and Miss Natalie Cox tender their sincere thanks for the very numerous expressions of sympathy received on the occasion of their recent bereavement and also for the lovely floral tributes sent to Mrs. Cox's funeral.

They trust the senders will kindly accept this expression of appreciation as it may not be possible to acknowledge every note individually.

MRS. BOYCE ELECTED

Mrs. Richard Fyfe Boyce was elected president of the International Women's club of Yokohama at the annual meeting held at the Hotel New Grand.

Mrs. F. J. Blyth was elected vice president, Miss Dorothy Dodd, recording secretary; Mrs. H. Baenninger, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. Julius Helm, treasurer.

Chairman of the committees are as follows:

Miss Mary Moos, press; Mrs. L. H. Lovely, drama; Mrs. W. Blundell, music; Mrs. D. C. Holtom, literature; Mrs. Y. Nomura, art; Mrs. E. L. Delmar-Morgan, social; Mrs. C. Gabrielson, membership; Mrs. R. B. J. Wolf, extension; Mrs. V. Barbashof, civics; Mrs. J. W. Palmer, bulletin; Mrs. H. W. Jackson, library; Mrs. W. E. Shields and Mrs. Y. Uji, members at large.

Mrs. R. Ruegg, retiring president, declared in reviewing the activities of the year:

"You must feel gratified after examining the treasurer's report to observe that the club is in such sound financial condition. I am sure that we all feel grateful to Mrs. H. F. Vincent, the retiring treasure, for her conscientious work.

"The library has been very much used and greatly appreciated. Our thanks are due especially to Mrs. Eiichi Kato and her able staff of assistants, who have given such willing service during library hours.

"We are pleased that we have been able to continue our monthly bulletin, through the efforts of Mrs. T. C. Maitland and Mrs. H. C. Lepper, who, together with Mrs. R. D. Raife as business manger, have so ably assisted Mrs. Kato.

"I also wish to bring back to your memory the very delightful musical evenings we enjoyed when Mrs. Madalah Masson, pianist; Miss Maria Toll, soprano and Mrs. John Goss, the English baritone, performed for us. The drama chairman, Mrs. H. J. D. Rooke, also produced two very delightful plays that were very well attended.

"Our afternoon meetings consisted of literary and art lectures arranged by Mrs. Kato and Mrs. J. G. Ziegler, who introduced a Japanese artist for flower arrangements, and Miss Florence Wells, who exhibited her collection of fans. The reciprocal meeting with the Rengo Fujin-Kai was arranged by Mrs. R. D. Standish, at which children presented a very pleasing program.

"In addition to the regular meetings, extension program's were arranged. The first was on the occasion of the visit to Japan of Dame Rachel Crowdy, a woman of international eminence. At the second, Mr. A. F. Thomas of Tokyo continued his talk on the "Theater of the day." The third enabled on evening audience to witness a demonstration of thought reading by the Dutch medical psychologist, Dr. Sylvain Boekebinder.

"Miss Olive I. Hodges planned an interesting excursion, guided by Mr. Yozo Nomura, to various organizations dealing with public welfare in Yokohama," Mrs. Ruegg said in summing up the activities of the club, "and we must not forget the other members of the executive committee, Mrs. O. F. Mocock, vice-president, who is the life and soul of the club and inspired us in all our activities; Mrs. Shields, who demonstrated her knowledge of the rules of the club, and recorded the activities of each meeting; Mrs. E. R. Smith, who gave all information concerning meeting to the press and Mrs. H. C. Cooke, the hostess chairman, who has gracefully welcomed members at the meetings."

Grau Says Revolt In Cuba Is Certain

Former President, In Miami, Believes Opposition Now Can Overthrow Mendieta

Revolt in Cuba is inevitable and may begin any day, Dr. Ramon Grau by San Martin, former President of the island republic asserted at Miami, Fla., on April 14. The oppositionists, he believes, now are strong enough to overthrow the Mendieta regime, which he regards as a strict military rule, setting aside all civil authority.

Dr. Grau heads the Autentico party, a new political organization growing out of the revolution that overthrew President Machado and out of subsequent turbulent conditions. This party, he asserts, is the real revolutionary party, according to the New York Times.

Movement Is of Slow Type

Reminded that lack of finances arms and ammunition had defeated many revolutionary attempts, the former President remarked that there were two types or revolution, a slow, gradual movement and a quick, decisive coup. The slow revolution, he says, is under way now. When the issue will be decided he would not say, except to insist that the rank and file of Cubans were ready.

In reply to a question as to whether he would take an active part in such a revolution he answered:

"Every Cuban who loves liberty must take part."

Reports that Antonio Guiteras, who was Secretary of the Interior in the Grau Cabinet and is at present head of the Joven Cuba, or Young Cuba movement, would be associated with him in a revolutionary campaign could not be confirmed.

Dr. Grau emphatically denied any connection with the Communists of Cuba, asserting that his policies as President, if continued, would have ended communism in the republic.

impulse-reaction type, the intermediate-pressure turbine of the reaction type, and the low-pressure turbine of the single-flow type. The astern turbines consist of one high-pressure and one low-pressure turbine being incorporated in the intermediate cylinder and the low-pressure turbine in the low-pressure casing.

Manganese-Bronze Propellers

All the turbines are designed to run at 1,715 r.p.m., the reduction gearing giving a shaft speed of 112 r.p.m. The turbines are connected to the pinions through flexible couplings. The gearing is of the double-helical type, having Vickers-Bostock-Bramley "enveloping" teeth. The propellers are of the built-up type with manganese-bronze blades and cast-steel bosses. The main condensers are of the Weir regenerative type, suspended from the low-pressure turbine casings, and provided with spring supports.

The steam will be generated by six Babcock and Wilcox boilers fitted with superheaters and tubular air heaters. The working pressure is 440 lb. per square inch, the steam being superheated to 725 deg. F. The boilers are arranged for oil burning only, the forced-draught, closed air-duct system with open stokeholds being employed.

Accommodation

The first-class accommodation will include two "Viceregal" suites situated on D deck, these suites including a dining-room, sitting-room, verandah, bedroom, and bathroom. There will be six cabins-de-luxe on the same deck. Accommodation will be provided for 445 first-class passengers in 199 single-berth and 123 double-berth rooms on C, D, E, and F decks. Many of the cabins will have a private bathroom. The first-class dining saloon will be on F deck, and will provide accommodation for 232 passengers. The main public rooms will be on B deck, together with the promenades for first-class passengers.

The sports and games area on A deck will be 275 ft. long by 82 ft. wide. The swimming pool will be on C deck. There will be accommodation on F, G and H decks for 665 tourist passengers in 280 cabins, all provided with running water. The tourist dining saloon on F deck will be 82 ft. by 68 ft., with seating accommodation for 344 passengers.

The launching ceremony was performed by H.R.H. the Duchess of York, and the arrangements throughout afforded an admirable example of perfect organization on the part of those responsible.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Most Ridiculous Ruler in History

Faustin Soulouque (1782-1867) began his career as a servant to General Lamarre, after whose death he rose to an increasingly higher rank with each of the numerous revolutions in his country. On March 1, 1847 the Senate of Haiti elected him President of the country. He was repeatedly defeated by the neighboring country of Santo Domingo, and as a result of these defeats, he abolished the Constitution and crowned himself as Faustin I, Emperor of Haiti.

Incredibly vain, he surrounded himself with the pomp and ceremony befitting a medieval ruler. He created a nobility, but appropriated all their titles for his own use. In addition to the titles I enumerated, he also called himself "the Viscount of Little Doll", "Count of Pimento", "Baron of Syringe and of Razor", "Chevalier of Pretty Heart", "Marquis of Painful Love", and many other titles the meaning of which he knew not or which would be unmentionable in polite society.

He was guilty of extreme cruelty and wholesale bloodshed of his own subjects. He was deposed in January 1859 and fled to Jamaica to save his life.

New Soviet Navy Base Being Built Near Chosen

Rengo

CHANGCHUN, May 9—Construction of a new Soviet naval base at Possiet Bay, in an inlet south of Vladivostok and near the Korean—U.S.S.R. border, is now under way, according to military information reached here today.

Soviet Navy officers completed a survey of the bay some time ago, the reports say, and large quantities of materials for the building of the new naval base are being assembled at Vladivostok.

At present, Soviet naval effectives in the Far East consist of three battleships of 5,000 to 6,000 tons displacement, one cruiser, three convertible cruisers, four destroyers, ten submarines, and a force of 4,000 men to man them, according to military sources.

Speaking of Handicaps

Mother—"What did your father say when you smashed the new car?"

Son—"Shall I leave out the swear words?"

Mother—"Yes, of course."

Son—"He didn't say a word."—Stray Stories.

Baha'i Faith's 91st Anniversary Today

World Religion Born In Persia Now Has Institutions In 40 Countries

By AGNES B. ALEXANDER

May 23 is the anniversary of the Baha'i Faith, the World Religion which born in darkest Persia in 1844, has today spread over the world with institutions in no less than 40 of the most advanced countries.

"The mission of the Founder of their Faith, the Bahais conceive,' writes Shogi Effendi, the Guardian of the Faith, "to be to proclaim that religious truth is not absolute but relative, that Divine Revelation is continuous and progressive, that the Founders of all past religions, though different in non-essential aspects of their teachings, 'abide in the same Tabernacle, soar in the same heaven, are seated upon the same throne, utter the same speech and proclaim the same Faith.'"

Baha'i Aims

"The Baha'i Faith recognizes the unity of God and His Prophets, upholds the principle of unfettered search after truth, condemns all forms of superstition and prejudice, teaches that the foundamental purpose of religion is to promote concord and harmony, that it must go hand-in-hand with science, and that it constitutes the sole and ultimate basis of a peaceful, an ordered and progressive society. It inculcates the principle of equal opportunity, rights and privileges for both sexes, advocates compulsory education, abolishes extremes of poverty and wealth, exalts work performed in the spirit of service to the rank of worship, recommends the adoption of an auxiliary international language, provides the necessary agencies for the establishment and safeguarding of a permanent and universal peace."

The Fore-runner of the Faith was known as the Bab (Gate), Who proclaimed on May 23, 1844 his twofold mission as an independent Manifestation of God and Herald of One greater than himself, Who would inaugurate a new and unprecedented era in the religious history of mankind. On his early life, his sufferings, the heroism of his disciples and the circumstances of his tragic martyrdom are set forth in "The Dawn-Breakers," the narrative of the Early Days of the Baha'i Faith.

Founder of Faith

The Founder of the Faith was Baha'u'llah,, whose advent the Bab had foretold. He declared his mission in 1863 while an exile in Baghdad. He subsequently formulated the principles of that new and divine civilization which by his advent he proclaimed to have inaugurated. He too was bitterly opposed, was stripped of his property and rights, was exiled to Iraq, to Constantinople and Adrianople, and was eventually incarcerated in the penal colony of Akka where he passed away in 1892 in his seventy-fifth year. His remains are laid to rest in the Shrine at Bahji, north of Akka.

The authorized Interpreter and Exemplar of Baha 'u' llah's teachings was his eldest son Abdu'l-Baha (Servant of Baha), who was appointed by his Father as the Center to whom all Bahais should turn for instruction and guidance. Today according to the provisions of Andu'l-Baha's Will, Shoghi Effendi, his eldest grandson, has been appointed as the First Guardian of the Baha'i Faith. Organized Baha'i communities are to be found in every continent of the globe. Christians of various demoninations, Muslims, Jews, Hindus, Zoroastrians and Buddhists, have eagerly embraced its truth, have recognized the divine origin and fundamental unity underlying the teachings of all the Founders of past religions, and have unreservedly identified themselves with both the spirit and form of its evolving institutions.

Revelation of Baha'u'llah

Shoghi Effendi writes, "Leaders of religions, exponents of political theories, governors of human institutions, who at present are witnessing with perplexity and dismay the bankruptcy of their ideas and the distintregration of their handiwork, would be well to turn their gaze to the Revelation of Baha'u'llah and to meditate upon the World Order which, lying enshrined in his teachings, is slowly and imperceptibly rising amid the welter and chaos of present-day civilization. They need have no doubt or anxiety regarding the nature, the origin or validity of the institutions which the adherents of the Faith are building up throughout the world. For these lie embedded in the teachings themselves, undauliterated and unobscured by unwarrantable inferences, or unauthorized interpretations of His Word."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Bathless Queen

Isabella, Queen of Castile and of all Spain, gloried in the fact that in her lifetime she only bathed twice. Once when she was born, April 22, 1451 and a second time when she was married October 25, 1469. After her death November 26, 1504, she was again subjected to the ceremony of immersion in water. Personal cleanliness which was highly developed among the ancients, suffered a complete eclipse after the fall of Rome. When Knighthood was in Flower, a bath was obligatory only on the eve of being knighted. Hence the original idea for Knight of the Bath. Kings and Queens were one with the Great Unwashed of their subjects. The great Louis XIV of France never washed except by putting strong scent on his face and hands. The strong scent served as a hygienic necessity. In the palaces of the mighty there were no bathrooms until well into the second half of the 19th century.

32 Years of Service in 25 Years

On February 7, 1935, Ernest O'Kress received his company's (Acme of Detroit) Award of Merit for 25 years of faithful application to his job. "Ernie" is known to his associates as a man who loves to work, and that is the reason for the somewhat startling title of his record. He actually turned in enough hours of labor—figured at nine hours a day, six days a week—total more than 32 years of continuous service. For 16 years Ernie worked from 6 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. every day. Still not satisfied he took the job of Sunday watchman at the plant every other week.

Professors Told To Stay In Bounds

Their Authority As Experts Is Limited To Own Fields, Carnegie Report Warns

College professors as experts in their special fields are destined to become increasingly important in national and professional life, but like other experts, they must be kept in their place, according to the annual review of legal education made public recently by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

Without referring to the part played by professoors in the New Deal, the review warned that even professors have their limitations, according to the New York Times.

How Professors May Err

"Possessing infinitely greater knowledge and capacity than a mere layman can ever hope to acquire, he (the professor) is subject to the temptation of confusing the part which he knows best with that whole of which we all know so little," said the report, prepared by Alfred Z. Reed, in charge of the endowment's department of legal education.

"Soldiers, bankers, educators—to cite only outstanding groups—cannot safely be left to themselves. They are liable, in all honesty, to identify the well-being of the community with that of their particular institution, organization, professional coterie, or social class. Under conditions of popular self-government, the expert must inevitably share responsibility with those who are less well-informed and less efficient. He helps to mold but he does not govern public opinion."

Bar Requirements Reviewed

In addition to discussing the position of the salaried professor in the learned professions and tracing the historical development of the university teacher, the report detailed the progress made in the requirements for admission to the bar in the United States, Canada and Newfoundland.

The number of lawyers in relation to the total population is presented by ten-year periods in an appendix. It shows that the ratio rose from 103 lawyers to every 100,000 of population in 1850 to 144 in 1900, fell to 116 by 1920 and increased to 131 by 1930.

The number of lawyers and of inhabitants and the number of lawyers per 100,000 population, is given as follows:

	Lawyers	Population	Per-cent-mil.
1850	23,939	23,191,876	103
1860	34,839	31,443,321	111
1870	40,736	38,558,371	105
1880	60,626	50,155,783	121
1890	85,224	62,947,714	135
1900	109,140	75,994,575	144
1910	114,704	91,972,266	125
1920	122,519	105,710,620	116
1930	160,605	122,775,046	131

In another table figures on lawyers and population are given by Sates for 1910, 1920 and 1930. Among New York's 9,113,614 inhabitants in 1910, there were 17,271 lawyers; among 10,385,227 in 1920, there were 18,473 lawyers, and among 12,588,066 in 1930, there were 27,593 lawyers. Nevada, the least populated State, had 294 lawyers to 81,875 population in 1910; 230 to 77,407 in 1920 and 231 to 91,058 in 1930.

During 1934 the number of States insisting that applicants for admission to the bar must show a general education and subsequent time devoted to law study has increased from eighteen to twenty-four. New Mexico is the first and only State to follow all the recommendations made by the American Bar Association in 1921. Twenty-two States in all changed their requirements. Enforcement of requirements through registration is particularly lacking, the report declared, adding:

"It is a sympton of the backwardness of American bar admission systems and of the haste and inconsiderateness with which essentially sound improvements are made that many States have no registration requirements and that, among those which exist few are adequate."

Classifying of Lawyers Scored

The report criticized steps taken by Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Missouri and Texas to require students studying law in law offices to study only with "approved" lawyers.

Such requirements, according to the report, establish by implication two classes of lawyers and the principles of selection which are most readily applied are the "race and social standing of the applicant."

"Although undoubtedly, in some of our large cities," the report continued, "individual lawyers believe that the solution of the ethical problems is to insure the dominance, in legal practice, of cultivated gentlemen of Anglo-Saxon stock, this attitude is so opposed to our American traditions that it has small chance of being generally adopted. If discrimination is not made, however, on these, or on similar grounds not many attorneys in active practice will be formally 'disapproved.'"

The report held that while this division between "good" and "bad" attorneys "is the worst which could possibly be drawn, it points the way to better things."

"Some day," it concluded, "recognition of the diversity of legal functions may form the basis for a corresponding division of legal practitioners into separate groups, each of which shall be adequately prepared for their own special responsibilities."

Nazis To Open War On Foes In Church

Party Leaders Decide To Show No Mercy To Opposition

A meeting of all Nazi department heads in the "Brown House" in Munich has decided that no quarter henceforth shall be shown the Protestant church opposition, it was disclosed authoritatively, recently, according to the New York Times.

The report from Munich dated April 13 is as follows:

The heavy hand of the Nazi regime will descend without mercy on the heads of all clergymen and laymen who oppose the regime of Reich Bishop Ludwig Mueller.

This decision, which is being withheld from the German public for the present, was revealed by an unimpeachable authority on church affairs.

Four Hessian and two Saxon clergymen who were taken to concentration camps for their activities against Bishop Mueller not only will not be released now, but their heads have been shaven and they have been put in regular prison garb, it was learned.

From the little that has leaked out concerning the Nazi department chief's meeting, over which Rudolf Hess, Herr Hitler's personal representative, presided, Dr. Alfred Rosenberg's radicals apparently had things all their way. This was true to such an extent that although the Ministry of the Interior decided on Tuesday to release the imprisoned pastors, it has not been able to put its decision into effect.

A few days previously, it was recalled, Paul Joseph Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda, prepared the atmosphere for the new church policy when he hailed General Erich Ludendorff, World War hero and professed anti-Christian, as the "founder of the new weltanschauung (world concept)."

This was in the telegram of congratulations Dr. Goebbels sent on his seventieth birthday.

The Education Ministry, supporting the radical faction following Dr. Rosenberg, Germany's philosophical and cultural dictators, has canceled the license of the Rev. Dr. Walter Kuenneth to teach in Berlin University because in scientific writings he expressed opposition to the "Myth of the Twentieth Century," the handbook of the German Faith Movement.

Reich Bishop Ludwig Mueller the games day in Berlin ordered all Protestant churches to observe in due form in their Easter Sunday service the anniversary of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's birth, occurring the previous day.

He also decreed that all churches display the swastika flag at Easter in respect for the Fuehrer.

Basses

Mr. Delano Hitch, Mr. Sacha Lury, Mr. D. D. MacGregor, and Mr. Warren Meunzenmeyer.

Some of the songs to be sung are:

Were You There?
Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen
Sometime I Feel Like a Motherless Child
Goin' Home
O Lawd, Look Down
I Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray
Everytime I Feel the Spirit
So Sad
Let Us Cheer the Weary Traveller
Shortnin' Bread
Who Did Swallow Jonah
Steel Away
Heav'n, Heav'n
Roll, Jordan, Roll
Father Abraham
Deep River
Listen to the Lambs
Swing Low, Sweet Chariot
Go Down, Moses
Didn't my Lord Deliver Daniel

An additional feature of the program will be two groups of Southern songs by Mrs. Alexander George.

All seats are reserved at ¥2 and can be secured from the members of the Chorus or from the Thrift Shop before the concert, and at the Imperial Hotel Auditorium Box Office the night of the concert.

a more definite understanding with Japan before making any radical change in the disposition of Soviet armed forces. As for the question of man-power, the Soviets are hardly more bothered on that score than was Czarist Russia. The problem in France, "the lean years" for conscripts which resulted recently from the extension of the term of French military service, does not exist for the Commissariat of Defense.

The Red Army is based on a compulsory military service system but, because the supply of men is more than adequate, the annual quota inducted into the Red Army is only a selected fraction of the available "class."

The term of service varies from two to four years, according to the administration. Non-Soviet military experts have placed the number of trained reserves at about 2,000,000, basing their estimate on the number of men which the Red Army turns back to civilian life each year.

Through factory units and the like, conducted by the Osoaviakhim and the Young Communist League, a much larger force of partially trained men is available. In fact, the army which could be mobilized in case of need is limited largely by transport facilities, the supply of munitions and the force of trained officers. As in the past, these problems are dominant. There is much speculation always as to whether the great expanse of Soviet territory would prove a decisive factor in case of invasion, as it did in the previous European conflicts.

Napoleon, it is recalled, failed in the Russian campaign, though he occupied Moscow for a time. Despite the greater mobility of modern armies and development of air service, the distance factor, in the general view, still has an importance, though perhaps not the decisive importance it once had.

Though there have not been here the spectacular anti-raid drills of the type which occurred in Berlin in March, the authorities for several years have been instructing the civilian population in the course to be followed in case of air attacks. Printed instructions have been distributed to all houses by a committee in Moscow.

Probably the bulk of the factory workers and school children at one time or another have donned gas masks. As indicated, the Osoaviakhim is responsible for most of the work of this type. A voluntary defense organization, with a membership of 13,000,000, the Osoaviakhim has under its control a large number of airplanes and gliders for training, flying schools and shooting galleries. Society nuclei are to be found in nearly every factory urban school and many collective farms.

Floods And Slides Kill 400 In Brazil

Bahia Suffers 60-Inch Rain In Five Days; Gunfire Stops Avalanche

Torrential rains, accompanied by howling gales, which lashed the city of Bahia and its vicinity for the previous five days, took at least 400 lives and caused injuries to several hundred persons, according to advices received at Rio de Janeiro on May 3.

Floods and landslides caused by the incessant rains have rendered more than 1,000 persons homeless and have demolished some 500 houses, according to the New York Times. Several large buildings were destroyed, among them the old Hotel Paris, which overlooked the bay.

The article continues:

An avalanche of mud and water had collected in the brush and bamboos behind the Bahia School of Medicine and threatened today to overwhelm the school buildings, but that calamity was averted when artillerymen opened breaches in the brush barrier with shellfire and diverted the flow.

Rains Show Signs of Abating

The heaviest rains, assuming cloudburst proportions, have fallen within the last forty-eight hours, but tonight they showed signs of abating. The total fall up to noon today was estimated at 60 inches.

(At the United States Weather Bureau in New York it was said that such falls were not unusual in tropical countries. Bagnio, in the Philippines, it was said, had a fall of 45.99 inches in July, 1911, and in Cherrapunji, British India, the average annual rainfall measures 428 inches.)

Upper Town Also Flooded

Both the upper and lower towns are flooded. The four public lifts connecting them have been disabled; so have the inclined railways. A building collapsed across one of the latter. The motor roads ascending to the upper town are almost impassable, the mud and water having collected on them in spots to a depth of several feet.

All buildings perched on the brow of the hill, among them some of the city's most fashionabe residences, have been vacated.

Deep crevices have appeared near the Medical School and the Treasury building and the latter structure has been ordered vacated. Deep crevices have also appeared in the municipal cemetery.

So serious has the situation become that a "state of public calamity" has been proclaimed in the city, and volunteer as well as regular military forces in the vicinity are being mobilized for rescue work. All of the city's police and firemen are being utilized and 2,000 Integralistas, Brazil's fascists, are assisting them.

The stoppage of railroad transportation resulting from the floods has sent food prices in Bahia soaring. It is feared that unless the rain stops soon and railroad service is resumed a serious food shortage may result.

Most of the telephone and telegraph lines are down. Power lines, too, have been felled in many sections and tonight virtually the entire city was in darkness. Landslides have completely isolated some boroughs.

Police stations, army barracks and even Bahia's almshouse have been converted into first-aid stations.

Most of the homes destroyed were in the poorer and most densely populated quarters of the city.

The destruction of communication lines has made it impossible to gauge definitey the extent of the damage or the exact number of dead and injured.

A landslide on the slope of Sao Joze is reported to have buried ten houses and their occupants. Another slide at Brotas and a third at Itapagipe are believed to have caused heavy losses of life. Seven firemen were buried yesterday in a landslide.

The failure of the power lines has greatly hampered the work of rescue parties.

Public subscriptions are being taken up to aid the needy homeless. All motion picture theaters and other places of amusement have been asked to contribute a day's receipts for this purpose. Congress is expected to make a substantial appropriation for relief.

The Third City of Brazil

Bahia, or to give it its full name, Bahia de Sao Salvador de todos os Santos (Bay of the Holy Saviour of All Saints), has a population of about 329,000 and is the third largest city in Brazil.

It is the country's oldest city. Founded in 1510, it was the capital until 1763. Many of its seventy churches, as well as some of its other edifices, date back to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

The city, situated on the inner side of a bluff-formed peninsula, is divided into two parts. Narrow streets in which are old business structures and warehouses occupy the lower town. The upper town is modern, with fine parks, boulevards and residences, flower gardens, shops, hotels, schools and churches.

The capital of the State of Bahia, the city is the center of the Brazillian tobacco and coffee trades. To the south of it are located extensive coffee plantations; to the north, sugar and tobacco plantations. Besides sugar, coffee, cocoa and tobacco its exports include hides, diamonds and hard woods.

Although Bahia was once a city of sewerless streets and bathless houses, recent years have been marked by widespread improvements. Miles of underground sewers have been built, ramshackle houses have been torn down to make way for modern buildings; a water-supply system has been installed and smallpox and other diseases either have been eliminated or are under control.

Seen from the deck of a vessel entering the harbor, the city belies its true size. Terraces of houses, palaces and factorics mingle in a hazy mass with the green of mango trees that clothe the sides of the bluff formed peninsula. Not until the shore is reached does one realize that the city is one of the largest in Brazil, and, for its size, one of the most cosmopolitan in the world.

British Weigh Peace Problem

Government Feels Out Public And Powers On Anti-Aggression Compact

It happens comparatively seldom that contemporary observers can point to one particular incident and say with any confidence that it represents the real turning point in a nation's policy says Mr. H. E. Scarborough in dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune. His article in full follows:

Nevertheless there is reason to believe that within the last few days there has been taken under discussion—although certainly not decided—by the British Cabinet a course of action which holds potentialities of completely altering British foreign policy, and perhaps with it the course of European history.

It comprises, as indicated in dispatches from this correspondent earlier this week, serious consideration as to whether, in the final effort to preserve European peace, Great Britain would be justified in departing from the role of semi-detachment which she has adopted since 1919, and in aligning herself definitely with the other European powers in the decision to oppose by force if necessary any aggression by a European nation against another.

Question Still in the Air

Nobody can say as yet with any certainty exactly what form this policy, if finally adopted, will take. That any British co-operation in keeping European peace would be closely tied up with the League of Nations machinery is pretty certain. That Great Britain would enter such an iron-clad security regime as provided in the now defunct Geneva protocol seems unlikely. At the moment British thoughts seem to be ranging somewhere between the present loose and nebulous interpretations of Articles X and XVI of the Covenant and the system of automatic and rigid sanctions which the French would like to see applied.

Moreover, the British are suspicious of military alliances camouflaged as devotion to League principles. They will insist that Germany must be admitted on equal terms to any "European league within the League" that may be worked out; or at least that they way must be kept open for Germany to join when ready.

Calls for Tact

Of course, the introduction of such a policy would have to be done warily and with infinite tact. Whitehall, for instance, has been wondering what the American reaction would be to the possibility of the British navy being used to blocade a country declared the aggressor by the League. It has been wondering how the dominions would accept the British decision to become formally tied up with continental Europe.

It has been wondering whether such a gesture might not prove just another episode in Europe's post-war tragedy of frustration, in which the concessions always seem to have come just too late. Most of all, it has been weighing the chances of having such a policy, if enunciated, adopted by the British electorate.

Would People Back Policy?

Until even a few months ago it was axiomatic in British politics that no government could take on fresh Continental commitments and survive. Even today that may be so. Nevertheless, it is interesting to speculate as to whether such a gamble would come off; and the odds against it at least do not seem as long as they were even last week.

However much they are camouflaged with idealism, the British, at heart, remain rather realistic. Today, for the first time since the World War, they are asking themselves (perhaps not even consciously) these questions: "Is Germany planning to start another war? If she does, can we keep out? And if we can't keep out, would it be better for us to hold back until the last minute in our decision whether to ally ourselves definitely with the anti-German bloc or to pin our faith in collective action against any aggressor? In other words, should we return to the concept of the League that prevailed in 1919?"

Isolationists Are Few

Almost nobody here except the Beaverbrook group of isolationists believes this country could long keep out of a major European war. The right-wing Tories favor an out-and-out alliance with France. Up to the present, however, the policy of the drift pursued by the Cabinet is fairly well reflected in the majority opinion here.

But (although they certainly would not admit it) the British are beginning to get nervous about Germany. Having profound respect for German fighting qualities and a certain feeling of racial solidarity with the Germans, the British tend, despite their often-expressed aborrence of Nazi methods, to admit that Germany cannot be held down indefinitely without an explosion taking place. And they are under no illusions that to defeat Germany again would be an easy task.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Sitting-Down Boat

Gardner Hill of Round Bay, Maryland, has a really unique boat. Two or four people can ride in it while they remain seated, but if one of the occupants stands up, down goes the boat. Mr. Hill has named his skiff the "Geehowitnettlesem" for a very good reason. The arrival of sea nettles in the Summer took all the joy out of swimming up the Seven River, so Hill build a wooden frame, covered it with wire just fine enough to keep out the nettles, and fastened two empty sealed floats to each end. Hand paddles on the sides propel the craft. The buoyancy is just sufficient to hold the passengers afloat when they are seated shoulder deep in the water, but if they stand up, they push the boat under.

Britain Undecided On Policy Regarding Europe

question of whether Britain will rely upon the League of Nations resolu- whether London will decide that it too will have some of the measures of joint protection against possible German movement westward.

London Caused Hitch

It is now known that the hitch in the Moscow-Paris plans was caused by London's reminding Paris that the Locarno Treaty was still binding, and that since Britain had agreed to help Germany in case of unprovoked attack by France, the French should go easy with too definite promises to attack Germany should Germany become involved with Russia on the east. It is reported that Paris and Moscow have met this difficulty. However, it is quite interesting that Britain should emphasize the Locarno Treaty at this time. And especially so after the British Ambassador in Berlin had mentioned to the German Government that under that treaty the Rhine must not be fortified.

The Locarno Treaty is aimed as preventing the movement of German land forces westward. An air convention, such as was first suggested by London but which has recently been quiescent, could neutralize the air over the Rhine and unite the British and French air forces—and perhaps those of Italy—against any movement by Goering's planes to the westward. The French are quite willing to make the agreement, but Britain has been trying to effect an arrangement bringing in the Germans. MacDonald's blast against the Nazis would indicate he does not now think much of the prospects.

The Naval Problem

Politically the French stand to gain from the German desire to build a new war fleet, including submarines, so expressly forbidden by the Treaty of Versailles. The British have taken the position that the peace would be threatened should German build the fleet of 500,000 tons about which she is talking to replace the 150,000 tons allowed by the treaty, with many restrictions.

The Geneva resolutions named a Committee of Thirteen to consider what to do about any German violations of the treaty beyond the declaration of March 16, which related to the army. But Hitler has spurned the Geneva resolutions as an unjustiable effort to judge Germany and Berlin makes it plain that it intends to build some ships.

Therefore, the British may soon have an object lesson of the efficacy of the Geneva plan to curb Germany. The French will then be in a position to repeat that they do not believe the Germans are bothered by anything other than a show of force. It would certainly be an application of Paris logic to argue that the British had best cast their lot with the anti-German bloc, make a defensive air alliance with France and proceed to build in Belgium and Northern France the airports which certain British strategists have recommended to their government. After all, Stanley Baldwin declared that the British frontier was on the Rhine.

Dr. Kung Submits Financial Report To Chinese Govt.

Statement Shows Revenues Have Not Fallen As Much As Expected

(Concluded from Yesterday)

As a result of reforms in the Salt Administration and improved collections, it is claimed that the Salt Revenue contribution for the service of the Hukuang loan has been maintained at a figure larger than required under the loan agreement, so that payment of one full interests coupon is annually provided out of Salt Revenue. In October, 1934, payment of all arrears to holders of Bonds of the Anglo-French Loan of 1908 was completed. This action constituted an important step toward completion of the rehabilitation of the service of the salt-secured loans of the Chinese Government. The plan of 1929, it will be recalled, provided for gradual repayment of the arrears of these loans—first of interest and then of principal. Payment of all the arrears of interest of the Anglo-French and Crips loans was completed by the end of 1930. Completion of the payment of arrears of principal of the Anglo-French Loan of 1908 made it possible to turn attention to payment of arrears of principal of the Crisp Loan of 1912. In December, 1934, the 1928 principal instalment of the Crisp Loan was paid, and in January, 1935 the Government announced a program of paying annually two instalments of principal of the Crisp Loan instead of one, in order that arrears of principal may be entirely cleared off by 1940.

The history of the Cotton and Wheat Loan floated in America is detailed. The negotiations "in a sense" grew out of the loan of 450,000 tons of American wheat for relief at the time of the great flood. The Report say: As of February 14, 1935, the cotton and wheat credits had been fully utilized, and purchases of flour amounted to a little over U.S. $1,000,000. All of the wheat (about 325,000 short tons), all of the cotton (about 160,000 bales) and practically all of the flour (totalling 335,000 barrels) have been sold. It is gratifying that all the cotton and wheat was sold for enough to cover the purchase cost plus freight and insurance; and although some merchandizing loss has been incurred in the case of the flour, this affects only about 6 per cent of the entire amount utilized out of the credit. There has been some operating loss on the transaction, but this loss is accounted for in its entirety (except as to flour) by certain exceptional charges inherent in the loan arrangements."

Among the exceptional charges was the payment to the American authorities of about 8 per cent. more than current world prices for wheat and flour. This is explained by the fact that when the loan was negotiated the American prices were a little higher than world prices, in consideration of which a longer credit period was fixed for wheat and flour than for cotton. The disparity between American and world prices materially widened, and so in October, 1933, the American authorities undertook to sell to China at world prices, with the addition of an extra charge not exceeding five cents U.S. currency per bushel of wheat, the charge being taken to measure the disparity at the time the loan was effected. A further exceptional charge was the extra cost entained by reason of the requirement that half of the commodities should be shipped under the American flag.

It is estimated that the net proceeds of the loan, after allowing for all expenses and for repayments of principal up to March 1, 1935, will amount to about $38,000,000, including approximately $3,844,000 paid and to be paid for duty and surtax. The estimated cost of the entire loan is about 3.5 per cent per annum. The proceeds of the loan are being devoted to productive purposes. Up to February 25, 1935, the appropriations have been as follows: $3,800,000 for repatriation of farmers in the communist-bandit affected areas of Kiangsi; $300,000 for relief of famine in Szechuen; $12,600,000 for reconstruction work of the National Economic Council; and $15,000,000 transferred to the Central Bank of China for currency reform. The National Council, at its plenary meeting held at Nanking on March 26, 1934, decided upon utilization of funds for various constructive purposes, including highways, reconstruction in Kiangsi and the Northwest, health enterprises, improvement of the silk, tea, cotton and fuel industries, and research.

Reform of the Tael

The Report describes the abolition of the Tael in 1933 as a notable reform: "For some time past the tael has ceased to serve any useful purpose, and its continuation as a matter of habit and inertia had become a source of complication and needless confusion and expense to the public."

Discussing the London Agreement regarding the stabilization of silver, it is now revealed that China made a reservation in ratifying that agreement. The terms of the reservation were as follows:

"In ratifying this Agreement, the National Government of China declared that as silver is the basic monetary standard of China, the National Government will consider itself at liberty to take whatever action it may deem appropriate, if, in its opinion, changes in the relative values of gold and silver adversely affect the economic condition of the Chinese people, contrary to the spirit of stabilizing the price of silver as embodied in the Agreement."

Dr. Kung concludes with the view that the problem of economic reconstruction in China is inextricably bound up with the problem of Government credit. Consequently progress in dealing with the one problem must depend largely upon progress in dealing with the other.

A program for accomplishing the desired ends must involve' (1) Establishment of a more effective budgetary system, embodying in particular definite control of expenditures. (2) Settlement of debts in arrears. (3) Reform of salt revenues, eliminating surtaxes, standardizing rates, improving the quality of salt, and imposing more effective control over the production and movement of salt. (4) Adjustment of tariff rates to produce the maximum of revenue, without unduly interfering with the trade in articles essential for industrial and personal consumption. Export trade should be encouraged by reducing or even waiving export duties wherever possible and desirable. (5) Continued effort to regularize and moderate provincial and local taxation and to develop it in harmony with national taxation. (6) Encouragement and rationalization of leading industries, such as production of cotton yarn and piecegoods, silk, etc. (7) Measures to stabilize the monetary situation, including standardization of subsidiary currency, in order to relieve production and trade of unnecessary hindrances. (8) Improvement of communications, particularly development of railways and highways. (9) Rehabilitation of agriculture and development of China's rural economy, which is the backbone of the country."

Some Schemes Helped

In this connection, Dr. Kung pointed out that notwithstanding the financial difficulties encountered, the Government has been devoting increasingly large sums to purposes of reconstruction and national progress. Expenditures of this character include support of the various activities of the National Economic Council, particularly the program of road development in the provinces and improvement of basic industries and agriculture, increased appropriations for education; railway rehabilitation and extension; improvement of telephone inter-communication throughout central China; development of aviation routes and of an aviation factory; reform of the monetary situation in Szechuen; flood and famine relief; and numerous measures of rural rehabilitation and reconstruction, notably those effected in regions recovered from the communists.

Finally, the Finance Minister urges the closer co-operation between the Government and the people, as well as among Government organizations, in order to realize the objectives of financial equilibrium and national reconstruction. The program outlined above, which is far from being exhaustive, will gradually be carried into effect as conditions permit.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Largest Fish

What is recorded as the largest fish ever caught by any method, according to attested records of the American Museum of Natural History, is a 26,594-pound whale shark which was harpooned on June 1, 1912, by Captain Charles Thompson off Knight's Key, Florida. The whale shark is a spotted giant, probably the largest fish in existence. It is in many ways rather like a whale (which is a mammal). The whale shark has seldom been seen for many years, and Capt. Thompson's catch was indeed a surprise to deep sea fishermen as well as ichthyologists.

The Odor Of Eternity

The Chateau of La Malmaison near Paris is famous as the retreat of Empress Josephine, wife of Napoleon I. She continued to occupy it after the Emperor divorced her, and she died in it in 1814.

Josephine, a native of Martinique, in the West Indies, all her life was enamored of luxury and strong scents. Musk was her favorite perfume, and so enduring is its odor imparted to the walls, that although Malmaison has repeatedly been sold and renovated, it still retains the odor of musk more than 120 years after her death. The building is now occupied by a museum.

Misplaced Stomach Operation Success

Child Makes Good Progress After Difficult Test

Alyce Jane McHenry grasped a chicken wing and chewed the meat from the bone with all the relish of any hungry 10-year-old.

Alyce Jane, whose misplaced stomach and other organs were put in proper position in a difficult operation at Fall River, Mass., recently had not for many months been able to partake of such solid food without extreme discomfort. She also enjoyed other nourishment, such as beef broth and cereal in generous quantities, according to the New York Times.

The hospital described her condition:

"Temperature 99.6; pulse 110; respiration 20. Patient comfortable. Progress satisfactory."

Alyce Jane indicated her improvement more enthusiastically. She asked a dignified surgeon how his hair happened to be so curly. She insisted that her mother, Mrs. Leuella McHenry of Omaha, Neb., and her aunt, Mrs. Loren Nelson, open her many presents and show them to her.

She showed keen interest in her mail, which would dwarf many motion-picture stars' correspondence. The postoffice has been forced to use a truck to deliver messages of encouragement and good wishes and presents, which are pouring in from all sections of this country and Canada.

The little girl's interest in good was interpreted as a very favorable sign and the hospital staff is attempting to meet the whims of her appetite so far as is practicable. When told she could have chicken, she feared it would be minced or boiled.

"If I could only take a wing in my fist and eat it," she said, "I would think I really was having chicken."

This was permitted and "Oh, boy, did she eat it!" exclaimed her jubilant mother.

Alyce Jane said she would also like pancakes or waffles, and they have been promised her for the near future. Her first expressed choice, macaroni, has resulted in many gifts of that food.

Oh, Oh!

Visitor: "But doesn't he ever get tired of canned stuff?"

Social and Personal Notes

SOCIETY HEARS SPIRITUALS

Tokyo society turned out in large numbers for the highly successful concert which the Negro Spirituals Chorus, assisted by Mrs. Alexander George, gave at the Imperial auditorium Tuesday evening.

Estimates at noon today, made by the committee in charge of the concert, were that between ¥800 and ¥1,000 had been made by the concert. The money will be given to the Kobokan Social Settlement and the International Ladies' Benevolent Association.

Headed by the American Ambassador and Mrs. Grew who occupied a box, the audience which heard the concert was completely representative of the American colony in Tokyo. In addition, there was a large group of Japanese who are noted for their interest in music and cultural enterprises.

Mr. W. Bradford Smith was the director of the chorus and Miss Isabelle Alexander, accompanist. The sopranos were Miss Alexander, Mrs. W. G. Hillen, Miss Mildred Julian, Miss Helen Lee,, Mrs. Alexander Lury, and Mrs. W. Bradford Smith.

The altos were Miss Marion Arnold, Mrs. Robert M. Corbin, Mrs. J. Delano Hitch, and Miss Naomi Muenzenmayer.

The tenors were Mr. George Hayes, Mr. Robert M. Corbin, Mr. Robert Gerhardt, Mr. W. G. Hillen Mr. George Marshall and Mr. Robert F. Moss.

The bases were Mr. J. Delano Hitch, Mr. Alexander Lury, Mr. Douglas MacGregor, and Mr. Warren Muenzenmayer.

MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. E. R. Dicover, first secretary at the American Embassy, will deliver the Memorial day address for the American colony in Tokyo and Yokohama on Memorial day, Thursday, at the Memorial hall of Ferris Seminary, No. 178 Bluff, Yokohama.

The memorial day ceremonies are to be held in Yokohama under the auspices of the American Association of that city which has invited the American Association of Tokyo to attend. Flowers are to be placed on the American graves in the foreign cemeteries following the service. The Rev. Harold W. Schenck, president of the American Association in Yokohama, is in charge of the program.

PORTUGUESE LEGATION DINNER

The Portuguese Minister and Madame R. de Mello entertained at dinner on Tuesday and their guests were: The Belgium Ambassador and Baroness de Bassompierre, the Japanese Minister at Lisbon Mr. Kasama, the Colombian Minister Dr. Esguerra, the Iranian Minister and Madame Azimi, Madame Nebil, wife of the Turkish Minister, the Danish Charge d'Affaires Mr. Hergel, the Chilean Charge d'Affaires and Madame Montt, the Cuban Charge d'Affaires and Madame Americo Cruz, the Master of Ceremonies Commander Takeo Yamagata, the Chief of Protocol Mr. Shinrokuro Hidaka, the First Secretary of the Brazilian Embassy and Madame Moreira de Abreu.

GOVERNOR'S RECEPTION

The Governor of Kanagawa prefecture and Mrs. K. Ishida were hosts to more than 200 persons at a brilliant reception at their official home on Momijigaoka, Yokohama, Tuesday afternoon.

Guests were seated at individual tables in the garden which was bright with a profusion of peonies in full bloom. An elaborate tea was served while a conjurer performed on an improvised stage among the trees.

Those who attended included high officials of the prefectural and municipal governments, their wives, members of the Consular corps and well known residents of the foreign community.

PRE-VIEW OF YCAC REVUE

Those hoping for advance information on the Y.C.A.C. revue "Fads and Fancies" to be presented at the club Saturday night will have the opportunity on Thursday evening for a specal show for children will be given from 6:30 p.m. at which adults will be admitted. Children will be charged ¥1.00 and adults ¥2.00 for the pre-view. The program is being kept a secret but many surprises are promised for there are many members taking part in the production. Despite this, the following information was gained. It is a non-stop revue in two acts of nine episodes in each act, and Jack MacDermott's Rajputana Orchestra will play for the production. There will skits, dancing and singing numbers and a short play. "Jane" of Tokyo has been making numerous costumes of many kinds so it promises to be a colorful production. The Pilares brothers are producing the revue and Maurice Russell is in charge of the show. There will be a dance after the revue on Saturday night for which the popular Rajputana orchestra will play. Those taking part in the production are:

The Misses Edna Allison, Doreen Edwards, Charlotte Eymard, Joan Hayward, Trudy Helm, Barbara Heseltine, Alice Kildoyle, Irene Lord, Emma Manley, Autumn Marshall, Velma Marshall, Betty Salter, Louise Stillwell, Lydia Vorobiova, Lina Wertheimber and May Wertheimber; and the Messrs. Mr. T. Watanabe Tells Of Poland And Her Products

President Of Watanabe Bank Is Hon. Polish Consul At Yokohama

"Poland is at present considered to be in a similar state to that of Japan some 40 years ago," declared Mr. Toshijiro Watanabe, recently appointed honorary Polish Consul at Yokohama, at an interview with a representative of The Japan Times.

"She is an agricultural country and has an abundance of natural resources. Poland is rich in forests and oil [illegible] large amounts of farm [illegible] In addition, she [illegible] in the chem[illegible] industrial proc[illegible] ger markets each year," sa[illegible] Watanabe.

Trade Relations

Speaking of Poland's trade relations, the consular official, who is also president of the Watanabe Bank, said that the nation is making great efforts to make known her products abroad.

Mr. Watanabe said that the recent exhibit of Polish products on the S.S. Dardanus, which was in Yokohama recently had created a very favorable impression among Japanese traders. He added that most of the exhibits on the vessel were low quality goods, but that high grade goods will be produced in quantity in the near future.

Floating Exhibition

It was too early yet to tell of the extent of the success of the floating exhibition, said the Polish Consul, but he felt that it had done much introducing the nation's products to the Japanese public. Round table conferences were held by the Foreign Trade Association of Yokohama with the Polish officials to find means of enhancing Polish-Japanese trade, and the following day, Governor Ishida of Kanagawa Prefecture, Mayor Onishi of Yokohama, prefectural and municipal officials, and business interests of the Keihin district visited the Polish ship to inspect the exhibits.

Much of Poland's progress can be attributed to Dr. Ignace Moscicki, president of Poland, who is incidentally the elder brother of H. E. Michel Moscicki, Polish Minister to Tokyo. The Polish president is a great scientist and his knowledge of and inventive genius in chemistry, physics and electricity have done much to advance his country on scientific and industrial lines, continued the port city banker.

Born In Yokohama

Mr. Watanabe was born in Yokohama in 1887. He graduated from the Political Economy College of Tokyo Imperial University in 1914, and then traveled and studied in the United States for the next two and a half years. On his return to Japan he joined his father in business. During his work, he made three trips to the mainland, his first in a private capacity, his second, in 1919 to attend a Rotary convention, and the third, three years ago, to attend the General meeting of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce and Industry in Mukden.

The Polish consul is associated with many local business enterprises. Besides being president of the Watanabe Bank, he is also head of Watanabe Dozoku Kabushiki Kaisha, Nihon Kenma K.K., Tokai Enkan K.K., director of the Hotel New Grand and a council member of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce and Industry. He is also chairman or vice-chairman of various social organizations in the port city.

Mr. Watanabe is fond of foreign music, travelling and shogi, Japanese chess.

The offices of the Polish Consulate are located in the Watanabe Bank, 2, Motohama-cho, 1-chome, Nakaku, Yokohama.

Germany Is Preparing New Criminal Code

Rengo

BERLIN, May 25.—That even unsuccessful attempts to harm the person of Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler will henceforth be punishable by death, was revealed here today upon the publication of an article by Dr. Ernest Shaefer, director of the Ministry of Justice, in an official legal gazette.

The article explained a number of new crimes which will be defined in the criminal code now under preparation. The article further points out that severe penalties will be imposed for "insulting the national symbols, ridiculing the German customs, and slandering maliciously German motherhood."

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

Roosevelt's Son To Assist Father

James Will Go To Capital To Act In Some Capacity Without A Title

James Rooosevelt, the President's eldest son, is going to Washington to work with his father and, incidentally, take another training course in the subject in which he is most interested, politics.

While it has been denied that James Roosevelt would become a member of the White House secretariat, he will serve in an advisory capacity to his father, with no title, says a recent report in the New York Times. One reason that he will have no title with his new duties is that a President's secretary has almost Cabinet ranking. It was felt that it would not be tactful or in good taste to elevate James to this extent; that people might feel there were too many Roosevelts in high places.

James Roosevelt is now in Boston, where he has been engaged in the insurance business since his graduation from Harvard in 1930. It is said he plans to spend two or three days a week in the national capital, and that he probably will retain some interest in his insurance agency here.

It is believed that the President wants his son in Washington, for one thing, to get and report on the "psychological reactions" of the people to the New Deal's plans. The young Roosevelt also would help in sizing up persons with whom the President comes into contact, and probably do some missionary work of a confidential nature. It is known that the President respects his son's judgment.

James Roosevelt, now 28, served as secretary to his father during part of the 1932 campaign. James is a strapping youth 6 feet 4 inches, two inches taller than the President.

"Sure, we're all crazy about politics in our family, except my brother Elliott," he remarked then.

He assisted James M. Curley in organizing the Roosevelt pre-convention campaign three years ago.

He has handled most of the Federal patronage in Massachusetts, a development that brought criticism upon him from party members, as the State's senior Senator, David I. Walsh, was thought to be entitled to act as spokesman.

Some Massachusetts politicians made references to James Roosevelt as the "Crown Prince" in 1933, after he had intimated openly in a speech that candidates for appointive offices would be wise to obtain his endorsement.

He married Miss Betsy Cushing, daughter of Dr. Harvey Cushing of Boston, noted brain specialist, in 1930. They have a daughter, Sara, 3 years old.

To Move U.S. Rayon Plant To Brazil

Nippon Dempo-United Press

NEW YORK, May 27—Mr. Wolf Klavin, Brazilian industrialist, today completed arrangements to buy the Chantillon Tubize Co.'s rayon plant located at Hopewell, Virginia. He intends to charter six vessels to move the entire plant to Brazil.

"The United States," he said, "has mills but nothing to manufacture, while Brazil has cotton and labor and needs mills." Before the depression set in, the plant was a $14,000,000 organization, employing 2,500 workmen. It has been closed for a year.

Report Of Discussion With U.S. Trade Body

rangement has any relation to America. Another instance is a regulation under contemplation that shipping companies are required to give 30 days' notice to the American Government before a revision is attempted of any conference rates. Such a regulation would extremely hamper shipping operations.

Opinion was expressed that the new American move in favor of an undisguised and yet far-reaching policy of a direct shipping subsidy system to the immense additional benefit of the American shipowners, thereby gradually discarding the present indirect mail subsidy plan, would make the solution of international problems to be discussed at the Conference to be convened sooner or later, still more difficult than ever.

Mr. Chevalier suggested that shipping interests of Japan and America get together to arrive at an agreement on this matter.

Telegraph Charges

Mr. Chevalier proposed that Japan and America draw up a joint statement stressing the need of reduced telegraph charges to be submitted to the Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce to be held this year. As telegraph charges between Japan and America were comparatively high and as their reduction to a reasonable level was deemed essential for the promotion of commerce and understanding between the two countries, it was agreed that both sides should work for the speedy realization of this objective.

Japanese Tourist Trade

Mr. Street desired information on reduced ocean and rail fares, and other special inducements granted on the Japanese side for the encouragement of organized and conducted tourist business and other efforts for increasing this trade. In view of the necessity for expanding this trade it was decided that Mr. Jinnosuke Takaku, Managing Director of the Japan Tourist Bureau, and Mr. Yoshiharu Nagashima, Manager, Passenger department of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, be requested to attend the next meeting to give the desired information.

THIRD MEETING, APRIL 11

Japanese Tourist Industry

Mr. Takaku explained that Japan and America were cooperating in attracting tourists to Japan. The Japan Tourist Bureau jointly with Board of Tourist Industry maintained two service offices in America, one in New York and the other in Los Angeles, and publicity work was conducted through magazine advertising, movies, radio broadcasting, travelogue talks, etc.

(Here Mr. Street called attention to the advantage of exchanging musicial and other radio programs with America for the purpose.)

Co-operation for tourist trade publicity with China is desirable and it is planned to take up the matter of co-operative advertising at a meeting of tourist organizations of the Orient to be held in Japan next May.

Mr. Asano and a few other members sounded the view of American members concerning amusement facilities which Japan might provide for attracting foreign tourists, in addition to sight seeing. There was a general exchange of opinion regarding the subject of dance halls, night clubs, horse races, motoring, theaters, sports and other forms of recreation. Mr. Carroll suggested that Mr. Street and a few others of the mission call on the Chief of Metropolitan Police to express their view in favor of less stringent enforcement of regulations regarding these and other amusements and recreations.

Mr. Nagashima expressed hope that, in order to encourage tourists from the eastern States of America to visit Japan and the Orient, American railroads might co-operate by giving reduced fares and other privileges, and that the mission, when back in America, use its influence to persuade the railroads in that direction.

Telegraph Charges

With respect to Pacific telegraph charges the Chairman proposed that a resolution be drawn up placing emphasis on the fact that the prevailing high rates are inimical to the promotion of trade and good will between Japan and America and urging that the four Japanese economic organizations and the American Economic Mission take suitable action to remedy the situation.

Mr. Chevalier supported this view and suggested that the resolution point out the fact that rates from London to China, Japan and Manila are 1s 8d, and those to India, 9d, per word; radio telephone from New York to Tokyo is now $39, from New York to London $30, U.S. currency, for three minutes; wherefore a reduction of 25% should be requested in the Tokyo—New York cable and radio rate both for ordinary and press messages,—it being the opinion of the merchants and bankers concerned that such a reduction would aid rather than harm the telegraph companies.

The Chairman requested Messrs. Chevalier, Andrews, Sonoda and Tajima to draw up a draft resolution embodying the main features of the above two views. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolution Adopted

"Inasmuch as the present rates of cable and radio across the Pacific are considered too high and unfair and inimical to the promotion of trade and good-will between the United States on the one side and Japan on the other, it was unanimously resolved that this section will recommend to the four economic organizations in Japan and the American Economic Mission suggesting that they approach the Government or parties concerned with a view to reducing these rates properly and reasonably.

"It is the opinion of the merchants and bankers concerned that this reduction will aid rather than harm the cable and radio companies, by resulting increase in volume of business."

Mr. Sonoda stated that he had ascertained at the Communications Department that telegraphic rates between Japan and America were fixed by agreement directly between the Japanese Government and American telegraph companies. Mr. Asano and other members then made observation that in that case the proposal for America-Japan cable charge reduction need not be submitted to the Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Chevalier, however, was in favor of the latter procedure, to preclude any possibility of provoking rate war. Mr. Carroll proposed that Japan and America first try to reach an agreement on the rate reduction before approaching the Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce. This suggestion was unanimously approved.

The Oil Question

Referring to the oil question the Chairman said that, in view of the negotiations now in progress between the Japanese Government and oil concerns of Japanese and foreign registrations, it would probably not be proper for an outsider to step in at this time. Nevertheless, having regard to the importance of the issue involved, business men of Japan were prepared to give careful consideration to the matter. The Chairman then expressed the conviction that a satisfactory solution of the problem would be found. The American members were appreciative of the Chairman's sentiment for which they expressed their gratitude.

Chairman's Review

The Chairman then reviewed the three day group discussion as follows:

"The outstanding subject of discussion in the sphere of communications was Trans-Pacific telegraph rates. In this connection I wish to call your attention to a very valuable service rendered by the Japanese-American Trade Council for making investigation on the subject.

"It was unanimously agreed that, inasmuch as the present high rates of cable and radio across the Pacific were inimical to the promotion of trade and goodwill between the United States on the one hand and Japan on the other, this section has resolved to request the four economic organizations and the American Economic Mission to make their best endeavor to achieve the desired end.

"During its three-day session this conference has studied various subjects having important relation to transportation and communications. Owing to the absence of Mr. Dollar, shipping matters have failed to receive attention to the deserved extent. Mr. Dollar, however, is due in Japan in the not distant future on his way home, when arrangements should be made for a conference between Mr. Dollar and Japanese shipping men.

Frank Discussion

"The frank discussion of various problems of ship operation and administration indulged in by this section, it is hoped, has been the means of clearing up any misunderstanding which might have existed.

"In conclusion, I am grateful that this discussion has been conducted most frankly, sincerely and enthusiastically as was proposed by Mr. Carroll in the first instance. We have become acquainted so well personally and with each other's viewpoint, which is an essential condition for solving, fairly and reasonably, various economic problems which are bound to come up in close succession between any two nations which are coming into ever closer relations."

Lastly, Mr. Chevalier remarked that Mr. Dollar was very much missed by the Mission, but as he was expected to be in Japan a month hence, as suggested by the Chairman, a conference arranged by Japanese shipping leaders at that time would be likely to yield satisfactory results.

Recital Given by Noted Contralto

Former Pupil Of Schumann-Heink Sang Selections From Schumann, Wolf

By John Goss

Miss Nobu Suzuki, the well-known contralto, has been unsparing in her efforts in this country to popularize the German Lied; it was therefore fitting that she should confine herself, at the recital she gave on Tuesday night at the Nihon Seinenkan, to this branch of song.

Miss Suzuki was at one time a pupil of the great Schumann-Heink, and it is with some of the authority thus imparted that she approaches her material. The songs she selected were entirely from the vocal works of Robert Schumann and Hugo Wolf, including the former's "Widmung" and "Mondnacht", and the "Verborgenheit" and "Der Gärtner" of the latter.

Popular Works Not Best

Their inclusion prompted the reflection that a composer's most popular, because most effective, works are not always his best, and particularly was this applicable to the false rhetoric of the "Widmung" and the dreary chromatics of "Verborgenheit." But Miss Suzuki sang beatifully Schumann's lovely "Der Nussbaum" and the dramatically simple and moving "Der Arme Peter," and some of the songs composed by Wolf before he developed his later pedantic mannerisms. Wolf said of Brahms that he could not rejoice; Brahms might have replied that Wolf's melodies could not leave the ground. They were so bound by the accentual and literary demands of the text that for the most part they suggest a comparison with the impotent and ineffectual struggles of an unfledged bird.

Miss Suzuki was occasionally betrayed by nervousness into breaking phrases that should have been taken in a single breath, and her sense of pitch was not always too secure, but her sincerity and deep understanding of the songs were always apparent.

Other Artists Assisted

The recital was interrupted by a not very satisfactory performance of the Sonata for 'Cello and Piano op. 38 of Brahms, by Professors Werkmeister and Sirota. It may have been an effect of the hall's acoustics, but the impression conveyed was that Professor Werkmeister played the 'cello part as if in too considerable awe of his responsibilities, while Professor Sirota tackled the piano score as if he stood in awe of nothing in the world.

The audience derived much delight from the sensitive accompaniments of Mr. Paul Rosenstand.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Unarmed Constable

Contrary to the old stories of the bad men of the Texas wide open spaces, Constable Tom Smith of Ozona, Texas, thinks they are quite all right and he has never carried a gun or made an arrest in his entire career. Constable Smith says: "I have been a constable continuously for 23 years, and have never made an arrest or carried a gun. I have never had to. As a rule we have no bad eggs in the country, and all I have to do is send a few of them home from time to time. I usually stay home at night, where all good constables ought to be. I'm very busy attending to may own business, and most people in this section do the same They usually work out their troubles when left alone. All I do is tell the boys to cool off, go home and think it over, and, after sleeping all night, take a good drink in the morning. Then they feel so happy they let it go at that."

The Footarchers of Bolivia

The Indies practicing this bizarre manner of hunting with bow and arrow, are the Guaranocas of Eastern Bolivia, near Santiago de Chiquitos. They call it "flight hunting" and employ it to hunt fowl very successfully. This manner of hunting is strongly suggestive of an anti-aircraft gun, and might be considered its prototype

DR. SCHERER ADDRESSES ENGLISH SPEAKING SOCIETY

Days of old Japan were recalled and the romantic story of Miura Anjin or Will Adams a contemporary of Shakespeare who lived and wrote in Japan, was told by Dr. James A. B. Scherer in an address before the Tokyo English Speaking Society at the Rainbow Grill in the New Osaka building Thursday evening.

Dr. Scherer told how he came to write and drew from his new novel, "Pilot and Shogun" which recently ran in serial form in The Japan Times. Rr. Scherer's new novel has attracted wide attention not only from foreigners living in Japan but from the Japanese public as well and since its publication, recent though it is, may tourists have added Miura Anjin to their other interests in Japan.

Dr. Scherer told Thursday evening how Will Adams won the confidence of Tokugawa Iyeyasu and following his addess, members of the society discussed the story.

Oriental Bank Closes; U.S. Policy Is Blamed

which were closed with the exception of the Tientsin branch. This latter was closed yesterday at the same time as the head office.

The depositors in the American Oriental Banking Corporation were drawn from all nationalities and all classes in this part of the world. Prominent were a large number of Russians, Chinese, and Americans, a great many missionaries being among the latter. It was learned yesterday that Mr. C. S. Franklin is being sent to Peiping by aeroplane, there to request the necessary action of the U.S. Court for China, Judge Milton J. Helmick being in Peiping at present.

Asia Realty Statement

The secretary of the Asia Realty Company yesterday issued the following statement:—

"The Asia Realty Company has applied to the U.S. Court for China for the appointment, under Section 77 B. of a Trustee with discretionary powers who will supervise the operations of the Asia Realty Company in conserving its assets for the benefit of its security holders, fearing the possible sympathetic reaction on account of the voluntary liquidations of the American Oriental Banking Corporation, the American Oriental Finance Corporation, and the Raven Trust Company. This procedure will allow an orderly retiring of obligations without sacrificing the equities securing debenture holders, other creditors, and the general shareholders.

"It is expected that, upon the trustee's complete disposal of loan certificates as a liability, the powers of the trustee will no longer be required for the continued normal operation of the Company."

Underwriters Savings Bank

A minor run started on the Underwriters Savings Bank on the Bund yesterday morning. The situation, however, became normal by 3 p.m. Mr. N. Yakoonnikoff, director and vice-president of the bank, in an interview with a representative of the "North-China Daily News," yesterday afternoon, stated that no more than $20,000 to $25,000 was withdrawn by depositors of small sums during the day. The run started in the morning, following the closure of the American Oriental Banking Corporation. This was probably due to some mistake of certain persons in connecting the two concerns, although they were not affiliated at all.

"We had plenty of silver and money in our vaults," Mr. Yakoonnikoff stated. "In order to satisfy our depositors, the closing hour of the bank may be extended to 5 p.m. or even to a later hour." The interviewer visiting the place found no necessity of such extension, as by 3.15 p.m. there were but two or three persons doing business with the firm over the counter.

Chinese Bank Closed

The Ming Hwa Commercial and Savings Banks, 330 Peking Road, corner of Honan Road, suspended business yesterday following the closure of its branches in Tsingtao, Tientsin, and Peiping. Mr. Tung Ming-hui, Chairman of the Board of Directors and Mr. Change Chun, General Manager, left for Tsingtao as soon as news reached here that there had been a run on three native banks there, one of which was the Ming Hwa branch. Despite their efforts, the branch bank was forced to close. The Tientsin and Peiping branches closed subsequently.

At an urgent meeting of the responsible officials of the institution in Shanghai, it was decided that business should be suspended. A notice was issued, stating that the bank would assume the responsibilities of settling the accounts with its depositors.

According to a Chinese report, the capital of the bank is $5,000,000, of which $2,750,000 has been paid up. The total amount of deposits in the savings department is $300,000. The bank was first established in 1921 at Peiping and was removed to Shanghai later.

A Chinese telegram received from Tsingtao states that the general manager, Mr. Chang, who arrived there by aeroplane last Thursday, has been placed under surveillance by the Municipal Government. The Bureau of Social Affairs and the Bureau of Finance have been instructed to inspect the books of the institution together with the members of the Bankers Association.

Plantation Labor To Be On Labor Parley Agenda

therefore consider the desirability of altering the clauses in question. The changes to be considered concern the possibility of allowing certain shifts to begin or end on Sunday, the arrangements for the changing over of shifts, and the allowance of extra time for preparatory and complementary work and for men in charge of underground pumps and fans.

International Post-Bag

The world-wide range of the I.L.O.'s activities is strikingly reflected in the contents of its daily post bag. Not only does the Office correspond regularly with the Governments of the 62 countries which are now Members of the International Labor Organization, but it receives and replies to communications from employers' organizations, trade unions, industrial concerns, institutions, and individuals in practically every corner of the civilized world.

This voluminous correspondence is carried on chiefly in English and French, the two official languages of the Office, but more than 20 other languages are more or less constantly employed.

French heads the list, followed by English, German, Spanish and Italian. The other languages in use include Swedish, Dutch, Norwegian, Danish, Portuguese, Polish, Russian, Czech, Bulgarian, Greek, Finnish Serbian, Hungarian, Persian, Japanese, Esperanto, Latin, Rumanian, and Turkish. The predominance of French, the language in use in Geneva, is partly due to the amount of local correspondence conducted in that language.

In the last complete year for which figures are available, the total number of letters and telegrams which passed through the Office was over 55,000, of which some 30,000 were received and more than 25,000 sent out. Notwithstanding a falling-off in the correspondence with Germany, the previous year's total was slightly exceeded. The accession of four new Members to the Organization (Afghanistan, Ecuador, U.S.A. and U.S.S.R.) took place too late in the year to influence correspondence with those countries to any considerable extent. However, the figures for the first quarter of 1935 show a substantial increase over those for the corresponding quarter of 1934, as regards both incoming and outgoing letters.

The correspondence of the I.L.O. with distant countries is growing steadily. The volume of extra-European correspondence in general rose nearly 10 per cent. in the course of last year. As regards correspondence with individual countries, the following increases are particularly noteworthy: South Africa, 14 per cent.; India, 14 per cent.; Australia, 16 per cent.; Argentina, 17 per cent.; China, 19 per cent.; New Zealand, 25 per cent.

The facilities for conveying urgent correspondence by air are increasingly utilized by the Office, particularly for correspondence with distant countries. During the last two years the number of letters sent by airmail has increased five-fold.

Apart from letters and telegrams there is, of course, a constant inflow of books, periodicals, newspapers, printed and roneographed documents relating to industrial and labor questions, whilst last year the Office sent out more than 290,000 printed papers, and nearly 1,500 parcels of publications.

Co-operative Relations

The International Committee for Inter-Co-operative Relations held its eighth session recently in Geneva.

The Committee took note of the program adopted by the Swiss Committee for Inter-Co-operative Action, and of the establishment in France of a committee for relations between agricultural and consumers' co-operative societies. Reports submitted by other national committees and centers for inter-co-operative action afforded further proof of the success attending the joint efforts of the movement in a growing number of countries.

Discussion took place on the various forms of intervention by public authorities in the economic field, and of the effects of such action on the co-operative movement. Attention was directed, by means of reports, to the Czechoslovak Grain Company, the Cattle Board and the regulation of the marketing of milk products in the same country, the butter question in Switzerland, the operation of the Milk Marketing Scheme in Great Britain, and co-operation and the wheat problem in France.

The Committee decided to hold its next session early in October.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Alien President Of His Country

Colonel Luis Larrea Alba was born in 1894, the son of Colonel Tomas Larrea who was, at the time, in exile in Chile. After returning to his native country, the youthful Alba entered the army of Ecuador in 1911, where he distinguished himself sufficiently to become Assistant Secretary of War, Police Chief, Head of the Military School, Assistant Chief of Staff, Member of Parliament and of the Senate of Ecuador.

On August 25, 1931 he was appointed Minister of the Government, and after the resignation of President Ayora, succeeded him as Provisional President of the country. He was accused of dictatorial designs and deposed on October 15, 1931, being succeeded by Alfredo B. Moreno as President of Ecuador. The Government strongly suspected him of revolutionary activities and decided to deport him. The Ecuadorian Constitution does not permit political deportation, and so the Government seized upon his foreign birth and deported, as as an undesirable alien, the man who had occupied the highest office in the country.

An Unbeatable Champion

An outstanding champ who reached the top and stayed there is Dr. Vernon Breedlove of Kansas City, who, during his 26-year career, has taken part in more than 1,500 wrestling bouts and never lost a match. Today he holds three titles—bantamweight, featherweight, and lightweight—all three of which he has held for many years. Breedlove is always ready to take on all comers in his class, and even some outside his class. On January 1, 1921, when his weight was but 125 pounds, he wrestled a 172-pounder in Sherman, Texas, and easily won the match in straight falls.

CLAUDE LAPHAM LEAVES

An epochal year in Japanese Music.

On June 11 the renowned American composer-pianist-conductor, Claude Lapham, leaves Japan for America enroute to London, to take up his duties with a leading cinema company. Claude Lapham, company. Claude Lapham, foreign came to these shores with solely artistic motives in his thoughts, fascinated by the vast and intensely original realm of pure Japanese music, and the only composer to blend these motifs with the subtle nuances of European music, in such a manner as to produce a homogenous continunity, a musical dish "fit for a King", pleasing the musical palettes of foreigner and native alike.

Two years ago, in Hollywood, Calif, he conceived the idea of the first Japanese opera in history. Realizing that Madame Butterfly, beautiful as it is, is not Japanese music, he wrote a simple story, assigned the task of writing a libretto in Japanese only to a local journalist, and with no knowledge of the language whatsoever, but with a background of several months intensive study of records, music, etc., imported from Japan, he began to compose Sakura. The Japanese language, he found much to his surprise, to be more perfect vocally than even the Italian, and in three months, the opera was completed, and shortly thereafter given a world premiere in the Hollywood Bowl with a cast of 2000 and an attendance of 20,000. Its reception was unprecedented.

From that moment until he came to Japan six months later, his every dream was tinged and imbued with the exoticism and glamour of the Orient, and to quote him in person; "My dreams of Japan and its splendour were far exceeded by the reality itself."

Just one year ago he signed with the Columbia Graphophone Company as exclusive composer and chief of their arranging department, and every month since that time, several of his compositions and arrangements, conducted by himself have been released.

In addition, he has appeared in two or three public concerts every month, as soloist, and has been most prolific in composition.

Strange to relate, Japanese composers of today strive to attain the ideals of Beethoven and the other great masters, and to compose as nearly like them as possible. On the contrary, Claude Lapham has spent this year in an exhaustive study of ancient and modern Japanese music and musical instruments, form, melodies, scales, peculiarities, and many characteristics which he feels lifts it above the ordinary and enthrones it on a pedestal of its own. While other composers have contented themselves with Nocturnes, Dances, and divers short pieces descriptive of Japanese scenes, he has been inspired to compose in 1934. The first Japanese Sonata for Piano;

The first Japanese Symphony for Grand Orchestra, as well as a suite for concert pianists, Mushi no Uta (Songs of the Insects); Geisha Suite, a series of songs, depicting the geisha's life from the maiko to the geisha's sayonara; and various solos for violin and voice in both modern and classic style.

This year (1935) he has composed Miharayama, a symphonic tone poem, in which a Song of the Mountain is first heard, triumphant, malignant, master of the world, blending into a Lover's Duet, the man's voice, a Cello Solo; the girl's voice, a violin Solo. When the lovers leap into the seething crater of the volcano, there is at first a contrapuntal treatment of the two themes, in fiery contrast, but gradually the lovers theme fades away and the Song of the Mountain emerges, again triumphant, omnipotent.

His last major work before leaving Japan, was his Concerto Japonaise for Piano in C minor, given a world premiere with the composer himself at the piano, on April 30th, at the Imperial Hotel, before an enthusiastic audience, and an initial broadcast May 5th over JOAK.

He departs with the good wishes of all his many friends, both Japanese and foreign, and as his steamer fades in the distance to the music of his Sayonara Song to Japan, we will cry; "Bon voyage, and may you soon return to Japan."

This last week Sendai has been the scene of many and varied festitvies to celebrate the 300 hundreds anniversary of the death of Date Masamune, the Lord of Sendai before the Restoration. Many exhibits were held not the least of which was the exhibition of treasures of the Date family housed in the Saito Memorium Museum. It was estimated by the police that during this week four hundred and fifty thousand people visited this exhibit. Friday the towns people of Sendai staged a fancy dress procession with many humorous and grotesue floats and historically interesting Samurai processions. In this procession attired in heavy suites of armour marched many citizens of Shiraishi who had come to take part in the celebration. A highlight in the weeks program was the unveiling of the statue of Date Masamune who was brought from Tokyo. Assisting in the ceremony was the small daughter of Count Date.

Dr. James A. B. Scherer of Tokyo was in Sendai to observe some of the activities in the recent celebration. While in the city he was a guest in the home of Dr. and Mrs. D. B. Schneder.

Grafted Cornea Restores Sight

Iowan, Blind For 2 Years, Sees After Operation Performed A Month Ago

Fremont Clark, of Wadena, Iowa, into whose left eye the cornea of the eye of a still-born baby was transplanted on April 5 at the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in an attempt to restore his sight, walked from the hospital recently a seeing man. The right eye has been gone beyond repair for six years, but now the left may be as good as new one of these days, says the New York Herald Tribune whose story follows:

The New York Academy of Medicine has interested itself in the unusual operation, which is rarely effective. It says that Clark, who upon entering the hospital could do little more than distinguish light from dark, now can distinguish the movement of fingers held two feet from his face, the transplanted cornea having taken root. It is expected that the restored eye, which now has what is technically known as "two-foot finger motion vision," will clear further within two or three months and give him normal vision.

Since the operation, which was performed by D. Famon Castroviejo, of Spain, the patient's eyelid had been sewn shut and the eye heavily bandaged so that the tissues would not be disturbed in taking root. Not until yesterday did Clark or his surgeon know whether the corneal grafting operation was of any avail. Six days after the operation, when the bandage was removed at the first dressing, Clark rejoiced certain that his sight had been restored, and sent a telegram to an Omaha, Neb., newspaper stating that he had seen for the first time in two years. It was said then, however, that it was impossible for Clark to tell so soon whether his was a seeing eye. In his anxiety, the Academy of Medicine reported, he might have thought he was seeing, but the academy said it was only a delusion.

The technique used by Dr. Castroviejo in the operation is a recently developed mode of treatment, whereby a section of a clear cornea is taken from some human eye and is implanted in the affected eye of the patient, whose opaque or non-transparent cornea is first removed.

Clark, who is thirty-five years old, is national director of the State of Iowa of the National Federation of Progressive Sightless. He lost his right eye in 1929 while employed on a construction project in Omaha. The left eye was affected sympathetically. It was on the left eye that the operation was performed.

After losing the use of both eyes Clark learned Braille and attended college, working on the college newspaper. Since the accident he has been receiving $20 weekly compensation from an insurance company. When the insurance company agreed to pay the expenses of the delicate operation Clark waived further compensation, provided the operation should be successful.

"If the operation fails," he said when he submitted to the knife, "I can still continue my education. I believe in destiny."

Clark will attend the clinic at the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center for two or three months.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Tunnel of The Giants

The island of Torgen on the western coast of Northern Norway, is chiefly remarkable for Mount Torghatten, with its curious Tunnel of the Giants. At a height of about 400 feet, there is a natural tunnel through the mountain, which is due to the erosion of the seawaves. The tunnel is 535 feet long, 250 feet high and 56 feet wide. Its presence indicates that the sea level was formerly about 400 feet higher than it is today. The sight of this natural tunnel is one of the most imposing in Nature.

Major-General Atomiya Confers With SMR Chiefs

Rengo

DAIREN, May 29—Major-General Atsushi Atomiya, member of the General Staff of the Japanese Army, met in conference with the authorities of the South Manchuria Railway Company at 10 a.m. today. General Atomiya arrived here early this morning aboard the steamer Ural Maru.

Although no details of the conversations which took place this morning were divulged, well-informed circles point out that the Japanese authorities discuss the possibilities of coordination between the S.M.R. and the Japanese with regard to the transportation of troops in Manchuria.

A NEW NOVEL
"Pilot And Shogun"
The Strange Story Of Will Adams (Miura Anjin), A Contemporary Of Shakespeare, Who Won The Confidence Of Tokugawa Iyeyasu
By JAMES A. B. SCHERER
Author of "Japan's Advance", "The Romance of Japan", etc.

The Ship in Which Will Adams reached Japan in 1600

'Dr. Scherer's presentation of "Miura Anjin" as a Japanese samurai is thrilling, and his portraiture of that bygone time has the ring of truth. His romance is real history, and I find it far superior to any historical novel of recent years. For he knows the Old Japan at first hand, and has absorbed its atmosphere. He is as much at home on the straw-mats of Nihon as in the Mermaid Tavern: and he transports his reader with him.'—Dr. Thomas Baty in The Japan Times.

TO GIVE PLAY

The Pacific Young People's Society will give a wel known Japanese play, 'Katakiuchi Ijo" by Kikuchi Kan, on Thursday evening, June 20 at the Nihon Seinenkan.

The society, an organization of American born Japanese, is giving the play as a means of establishing a scholarship fund with which to help deserving members continue their study in Japan.

The play is a dramatized version of the author's prose tale, "Onshu no Kanatani," concerning the building of a famous tunnel in the narrow gorge of the beautiful valley in Kyushu called Yabakei, now famous all over Japan for its charm in maple-leaf time. The English translation by Glenn W. Shaw is being used as a definite cultural project of the group. By giving it in English the group will make a contribution to the interpretation of Japanese drama. By using a Japanese play, the group itself will be taught Japanese action and customs. From the proceeds they hope to build up a necessary fund of ¥1,000 to carry on the work of the Society.

Hundreds of students of English in Tokyo universities will attend the performance at a student rate. The mezzanine floor is being reserved for Patrons.

Reich Rearmament Plan Outlined By Gen. Goering

built up her air fleet in short order by elaborate industrial preparation she has no fear of getting behind.

It appears that Germany has all the pilots she needs. They were trained in passenger and sport planes, and each accepted pilot has more than 100 flying hours to his credit. Also each pilot after having completed his training immediately took on two or three pupils, which explains the force's quick expansion.

In addition, it seems that in case of emergency Germany could make use of her passenger planes, although not as fighting planes but only for limited purposes.

Reveals How Reich Rearmed

Air Minister Hermann Wilhelm Goering in his amazingly frank address before the Foreign Press Association mapped out the secret process by which the Reich, defying the Versailles treaty, had secretly rearmed in the air.

Air rearmament, General Goering said, "was accomplished in a manner so original and so unique that without a knowledge of the facts in the case it would be hard to believe."

"We proceeded along entirely new lines," he went on. "I declined to rearm slowly and gradually because then there would have existed the danger, in the event of difficulties, that our air weapon might not have been ready.

"I therefore first exhausted all technical and industrial possibilities to the very utmost, a fact that enabled us then to create our air weapon with lightning-like speed.

"When some newspapermen, at a time before we acknowledged the existence of an air fleet, were writing about sounds they heard in a forest they were not far wrong. We were indeed manufacturing parts in secret places."

General Goering declined to say just how big the new air force was, but asserted "it is not so big as foreign countries picture to themselves."

"The decisive thing is not the number of planes," he said, "but their quality—not the number of fliers but their qualities, character and ability."

Pay Cuts Up to Others

"I have suffered a great deal in past years through having to play hide-and-seek in the matter of an air force," he said at another point. "A year ago I could say with good conscience that we had nothing. * * * Since others refused to disarm, we were force to arm also.

"It depends upon others to determine how big Germany's air force is. If others scrap theirs we will scrap ours, but they must be honest about it and be prepared to deal on the basis of strictest equality."

The Air Minister declared Germany would join "any air convention provided Germany's security was safeguarded."

Asserting "we have nothing more to hide, except purely technical details which every government naturally keeps to itself," he continued:

"We want peace. We do not want to be provoked into breaking it. We seek no adventure, but only want an equal status."

Talking informally to newspaper men, General Goering said Germany was buying air defense inventions whether the inventor be "heathen, Christian or Jew,55 because "inventions do not have grandmothers whose race must be probed."

The Air Minister denied the existence of any plans to send troops into the demilitarized Rhineland, saying, however, that an increased police force was needed there.

Germany's airmen, General Goering said, total "a couple of thousand, not 10,000, as has been claimed," and they are not walking about arrogantly with chips on their shoulders.

The day is over, he insisted, when other nations could grant equality with Germany.

"We now have equality because we took it," he said.

Asked whether he would equip the planes with American motors, he replied:

"We bought some American motors at the beginning and put them on our planes, but that was only at the start, when we had none of our own manufactured."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Versatile Actress

On December 6, 1932, at exactly six o'clock, Miss Donna von Bach, opened a very unique production of "The Recruiting Officer" at the Provincetown Theater, Greenwich Village, New York City. This comedy, with which the New Theater was opened at 6 p.m. December 6, 1732, in the building of the Hon. Rip Van Dam, Nassau Street, New York, is the earliest play known to have been acted in North America, and Miss von Bach's performance was commemorative of that occasion. She enacted all the incidents and scenes accurately, playing all nine characters herself through the five acts.

Social and Personal Notes

SUCCESSFUL REVUE

A capacity audience of 400 attended the Y. C. and A. C. revue, Fads and Fancies, presented at the clubhouse Saturday evening. The show, under the direction of the Pilares brothers, was composed of 18 episodes which included singing and dancing numbers, skits and a one act play. It was undoubtedly one of the best shows of its kinds ever presented in the port city. All the numbers were well executed, the costumes and lighting were effective, and the acts followed in rapid sucession to keep the enthusiasm of the audience at a high pitch.

Among those who atte..ded were Governor of Kanagawa prefecture and Mrs. Kaoru Ishida and the Mayor of Yokohama and Mrs. Ichiro Onishi.

Jack McDermott and his Rajputana orchestra opened the performance by playing a number of old time favorites in which the crowd joined heartily.

The first episode, Precision in Blue, a dance number by the Misses Autumn Marshall, Doreen Edwards, Lydia Vorobiova, Lina and May Wertheimber was a snappy and well executed presentation. This was followed by a smart skit, "Not Tonight, Dearie," in which the Messrs. Hans Johansen, Donald Clark, Walter Helm, Mrs. E. Manley, and the Misses Edna Allison, Lena and May Wertheimber participated. The next item was Jazz Rhythm, a tap dance by Miss Louise Stillwell and the Messrs. Maurice Russell and Ernest Eastlake, in which the trio executed a number of hard steps with pep and precision. Moonlight Waltz, which followed, was a graceful presentation by the Misses Autumn Marshall, Edna Allison, Joan Hayward and Irene Lord. The next number was Country Dance, a colorful folk dance by Miss Alice Kildoyle and Mr. Josef Pilares.

Les Apaches, presented something different to the usual run in this type of number. After Miss Autumn Marshall had sung "My Man", Donald Clark as Mimi, and Maurice Russell as Jacques presented an Apache Dance which had the audience in gales of laughter. Mimi had the considerably smaller Jacques in considerable trouble trying to play the dominant male. Melody and Fun, a solo performance by Harry Aitchison, gave this able entertainer a chance to present something different. He told of the Y.C.A.C.'s rugby trip to Kobe plus appropriate musical accompaniment, and his encore, was his interpretation on the piano of 'It Aint Going To Rain No More" as played on various instruments including the mouth organ, barrel organ, a brass band, bagpipes and a mechanical piano. Memories, a breezy skit by Miss Autumn Marshall, and the Messrs. Hans Johansen and Maurice Russell followed.

Tropical Fantasy, a Hawaiian number brought the first half of the program to a close. This colorful and pleasing episode was opened by Henry Hoesch singing "That's What the Lei Said To Me", accompanied by the Waikiki Trio, composed of the Messrs. Chris Fernandez, William Fehlen and Herbert Schoene. Miss Charlotte Eymard gave a hula solo and was joined later by the Misses May and Lena Wertheimer, Betty Salter, Irene Lord and Louise Stillwell. The episode ended by six-foot-two Hans Johansen giving an uproarious interpretation of the famous tropical dance.

"Old time melodrama" with villian, villainess, hero and heroine, was seen in "The Fatal Necklace" which was staged with the exaggeration of a road show. The capable actors were Velma Marshall, Walter Helm, Donald Clark, Emma Manley, Trudy Helm, and Henry Heesch.

Comedy romped through the selections of "Ye Olde Quartette" composed by Maurice Russell, Donald Clark, William Fehlen, and Hans Johansen. When a sour note was struck, as it was often, one of the singers slid behind stage, grabbed a gun and shot the offending singer until there was no one left but himself.

In red and white costumes with straw hats and black stockings, Joan Hayward, Barbara Heseltine, Edna Allison and Irene Lord gave a chorus dance, "Le French Can-Can" which the crowd rightfully insisted on having repeated.

AMAU LECTURES

Mr. Eiji Amau, chief of the information section of the Foreign Office, left Tokyo Station for Kansai at 11 p.m. Monday. He is giving a series of lectures at Osaka today, in compliance with the requests of the Osaka Economic Society and the Osaka club, on Japan's foreign and commercial policies. He is expected to give similar lectures at Nagoya Wednesday and to return to Tokyo June 6.

MISS REEVES ENROUTE HOME

Miss Virginia Reeves of Ferris Seminary, Yokohama, is en route to the United States to spend the summer at her home in Bloomington, Indiana. She will continue her study of music and return to the seminary in the fall to resume her work in the music department.

TO MANCHOUKUO

Mr. and Mrs. Jan Fabius have left Tokyo for a month's tour of Manchoukuo and North China. Mr. Fabius is a correspondent for Netherlands papers.

KEISEN JOGAKUEN

Gifts which Miss Michi Kawai principal brought with her upon her recent return from America, were received at the program held by the Keisen Jogakuen Saturday afternoon.

At the literary and musical program in the gymnasium, the curtain which had been designed and presented to the school by the institution's first and only graduating class, was used for the first time. The school's mandolin club gave several selections and a play and three scenes from Les Miserables were produced, the students speaking good English. A program of marches and dances and readings were given in the garden. Among the gifts which Miss Kawai brought back were a player piano, a victorola, and a number of pictures.

GOING TO AUSTRALIA

Mr. Katsuji Debuchi, Ambassador at large, accompanied by Mr. Yasunto Shudo, commercial secretary of the Foreign Office and Mr. Kaoru Toyoda, Second class secretary to the Japanese Embassy to China, will leave Kobe on July 15 for Australia as the envoys for returning courtesies of Mr. John G. Latham, Minister for External Affairs, who visited Japan last summer.

After stopping at Manila, Mr. Debuchi expects to arrive at Sydney in early August. On his way home, Mr. Debuchi will stop at Batavia to improve relations between Japan and the Dutch East Indies.

EMPRESS SAILING

The Empress of Asia left Hongkong on Friday and is due to arrive at Kobe at 5 p.m. on Wednesday, and will be despatched hence for Victoria and Vancouver, via Yokohama and Honolulu, at 4 p.m. on Thursday.

AT ORIENTAL HOTEL

New arrivals at the Oriental Hotel, Kobe, Monday were: Mr. L. E. Pearce, Mr. M. Libby, Capt. H. T. Godwin, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Ferguson, Mrs. L. Wordingham, Mr. and Mrs. T. Butterfield, Mr. and Mrs. Henry, Mrs. G. Davis and Mrs. J. Drummond.

ELECTION RECOMMENDED

Admiral Minoru Saito, former premier, has been recommended for president of the Japan Boy Scout League. His nomination was made at the special general meeting of the League at the Nihon Seinenkan Sunday morning.

Although 78 years old, Admiral Saito is energetic both in thought and action. He has expressed the desire to go camping with the younger Boy Scouts at Higashi-Murayama this summer.

STUDENT AIDED

Mr. Keiji Matsunobe, 22, student in the literary department of the Kyoto Imperial University, is leaving shortly for America to participate in the English Speaking Assembly of World Students to be held this summer. Mr. Matsunobe won the right to make the trip by his brilliant school record and promising future but he lacked the money to make the trip. Hearing of this, Mr. Denemon Ito, wealthy resident of Kokura and Fukuoka prefectures, gave 1,000 yen for his trip. This is the second generosity the young student has received from Mr. Ito. He is studying at the university on the Ito Memorial Scholarship.

EXHIBITION CLOSES

An exhibition of photographs made by the students of the Oriental School of Photography was held at the Sankyo Art Galleries, Ginza, from June 1 to 3. The school is under the management of the Oriental Photographic Materials Manufacturing Company of Tokyo where many Japanese made films, plates, and printing papers are being manufactured.

In "Arithmetic," Hans Johansen, Maurice Russel, Walter Helm, and Lydia Vorobiova did astonishing tricks with straw hats, holding attention in the style of accomplished magicians.

"Hoops of Silver" brought back the touch of the picturesque and the beautiful with Irene Lord, Joan Hayward, Doreen Edwards, May Wertheimber, Trudy Helm, and Lina Wertheimber presenting a graceful number. The effect was stressed in the following number, "Whirling Capes," when Edna Allison, Autumn Marshall and Maurice Pilares performed skillfully with large circular capes.

Alice Kildoyle gave a toe dance that was daintily and prettily executed and in the next moment, Irene Lord and Edna Allison in maids caps and aprons were whirling across the stage, with silver cocktail shakers keeping time to their movements. From the swift action of this number, the revue passed into its grand finale Ha Cha Cha with everyone singing and dancing with spirit and merriment.

Mr. A. K. Nipkow, president of the club, thanked those who made the revue possible from behind the footlight. These included:

Stage Manager Maurice Russell, Assistant F. R. Harriss, Mechanical and lighting effects Martin Zuber, Assistant Mrs. Devin, Musical Director Ethel Stillwell, Orchestra Jack McDermott and his Rajputana Band, Costumes "The Jane" Tokyo (Vera Boyce).

CAPTAIN MARTIN LEAVING

Catain Truman Martin expects to leave about June 17 for Manila en route to the United States. He will visit in Manila about a week and then board a transport for the United States. He will be stationed in Ft Snelling, St. Paul, Minnesota.

ITINERARY CHANGED

At a meeting of the department of education, it was decided that Dr. S. Hatai who is going to England soon to attend the World Biological convention, would not go by way of Canada but by way of Honolulu and the United States so that he may visit more institutions and attend more conferences.

According to the present itinerary, the famed Japanese scientist will leave on the Chichibu Maru on June 13 and will spend a short time inspecting the Bishop Museum in Honolulu before going on to San Francisco. In Southern California, he will visit several laboratories.

From California, Dr. Hatai will go to the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia to attend the meeting of the Board of Advisers, of which he is still a member, of Wistar Institute. This is the national brain research laboratory in the United States and Dr. Hatai has been an adviser of the institute for a number of years, dating back to the time when he was associated with the university.

His next stop will be New York city where he will visit Rockefeller Foundation and confer with its directors. He will attend a meeting at the University of Toronto before sailing for the World Biological meeting in England.

Returning, he will visit Holland, France, and Lisbon where there is another world science meeting. He will return to Japan late next fall.

19th ILO Conference Under Way At Geneva

supposes, but that it does furnish a partial remedy seems to be shown by the results already obtained, particularly in highly mechanized industries.

Purchasing Powers

In his annual Report Mr. Butler, gives a survey of the measures adopted in various countries, for dealing with the economic depression. His conclusion is that indications do not point to the success of the ordinary methods used to meet previous depressions. On the contrary, there seems to be good ground for thinking that those Governments measures have, on the whole, which have adopted "unorthodox" succeeded better than those which have relied on the traditional processes of deflation.

As regards wage reductions in particular, the impression gained in the last two years—that the reduction of costs mainly at the expense of wages has not yielded the expected results—is further confirmed. The experience of 1934 in Great Britain and the United States appears to the Director to bear out the view that in countries where wages and salaries represent a very large proportion of the aggregate purchasing power of the nation the prosperity of industry is intimately bound up with the rise and fall of the incomes of wage and salary earners. In Great Britain weekly rates rose slightly in 1934 to 96 per cent of the 1929 level. Cuts were wholly or partly restored in the public services, on the railways and in some other industries. In the United States hourly earnings averaged 98 per cent of the 1929 figure and weekly earnings 75.5 during the first nine months, as against 89 and 68 in 1933. It is noticeable, and probably not without significance, that in Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Italy and Poland, where wages continued to decline, little or no reduction of unemployment took place.

Circumstances have changed, and under modern conditions what may have been true in the past now no longer holds. In particular, it is possible to attach too much significance to the promotion of exports. A single-minded determination to force down wages in order to increase the volume of sales abroad may well prove detrimental to wider economic issues.

Importance of Home Market

"After all, the great bulk of national production must find its outlet in the home market—in other words, must be bought by the people of the country, the great majority of whom are wage and salarly earners. That is to say, the amount of money in internal circulation, the velocity of its circulation and its distribution among the various sections of the community remain the decisive factors in determining the volume of purchasing power available to absorb the product of industry. Furthermore, even in respect of international trade, to concentrate solely upon measures for promoting exports is a shortsighted policy. It is of little avail to be in a position to compete successfully upon the world market if the purchasing power of the various countries remains low and if these countries are surrounding themselves with impassable trade barriers. Looking at the world as a whole, what is fundamentally necessary is not merely to encourage exports but to promote the ability and willingness to accept imports. This again is largely a question of adequate purchasing power. Only if the ability to consume is keeping pace with the ability to produce in each of the several countries will there be a readiness to accept imports and to work towards the progressive removal of the barriers to trade."

Young Persons

The Director of the I.L.O. points out that the most poignant and disturbing aspect of unemployment is its effect on the young.

Important though it is to help the adult to keep his home together and to maintain his place in society during periods of enforced idleness, it is even more important both for the individual and for the nation to enable the young man to lay the foundations of his career. However hard he may be hit, the former can always hope to recover his position by hard work and good fortune, but the latter, if the springs of his ambition are dried up and if the chances of learning his profession are denied him in youth, may be completely incapacitated from ever making a decent living or becoming a useful citizen. The urgency and gravity of the question is now being realized in many countries, and it is to be discussed at this year's Session of the International Labor Conference. The I.L.O. has prepared a report explainning the various measures and expedients that have been adopted throughout the world to cope with the problem.

"The principal remedy is to be found in prolonging education. The postponement of the normal age of industrial employment till fifteen or even sixteen has already been adopted in Norway, Uruguay and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, in most State of the United States, in some of the Canadian provinces, in some cantons of Switzerland and in a few districts in Great Britain. The justification of this measure lies not only in the relief which it affords to a congested labor market but much more in the need to ensure greater intellectual and bodily development under the prevailing conditions of urban civilization. Much has been done in this direction by residential training centers and by courses of instruction and physical training organized for the young unemployed in a number of countries. But it cannot be claimed that that problem has anywhere been solved. No social problem is of more vital importance, and it may safely be said that money saved by ignoring the dangers of intellectual, physical and moral deterioration to which the youthful unemployed are exposed represents the worst and most short-sighted form of national economy."

Lufthansa Plane Found Equipped For Bombing

The Le Bourget airport played host today for the first time to what French aviation men described as a German bombing plane.

The Lufthansa passenger plane from Berlin arrived at the Paris airport on May 4 at Le Bourget in the record time of 3 hours and 52 minutes, averaging 285 kilometers an hour and at times going more than 300 kilometers (186.3 miles) an hour, according to the New York Times.

When the French baggage crew sought the regular bow baggage compartment, the German crew told them it had been changed and was now in the interior. The baggage men found the new compartment and declared that in removing the baggage they saw regular bomb-launching apparatus.

The plane stirred particular interest because it is one of the newest German tri-motored planes built on finer lines than the older ships and powered by American motors.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Dragon Tree

This curious tree belongs to the family of Lilaceae, which includes the asparagus. The most famous dragon tree was the one in Teneriffe, one of the Canary Islands, found by Humboldt. That tree was 70 feet tall and 45 feet in circumference, and was believed to be 6,000 years old. It is the tree to which Herodotus referred when he described the Flora of the Garden of the Hesperide in Cyrenaica, northern Africa, which I visited a few months ago. The Golden Apples coveted by Hercules were supposed to have grown on this tree, although modern scholars believe that the greatly publicized Golden Apples were plain yellow skinned oranges. A resin called "Dragon's Blood" is a product of the Dragon Tree.

April Fools Day

The various names for the day are, in Spain "Bobo de Abril," in France "Poissons d'Avril," in Japan "Doll's Day" and in Scotland "Gowk's Day" (Cuckoo Day). In Portugal, Holland and Russia, the day is known respectively as "Trick," "Fop" and "Joke" Day.

Brazil Puts Ban On Blocked Marks

Federal Trade Council Rules All Exports Must Be Paid For In Free Exchange

An attempt by Germany to get an advantage in the Brazilian market through the use of blocked and compensated marks was upset on May 13. The Federal Council on Foreign Trade issued an order calling for a free money market, intended to apply to all nations.

There have been many complaints from merchants and bankers concerned in trade with the United States that Germany, through its system of dealing in blocked and compensated marks, and could dump goods in the country at prices 30 to 35 per cent below those that could be quoted by importers from the United States. American trade has suffered accordingly in recent months, according to the New York Times.

It is said that Germany, by its exchange operations, had also tied up £7,000,000, thus depriving Brazilians of the power to use this amount to trade with other countries. Brazil's exports to Germany exceed its imports from that country.

Now, under the new order, the German exchange monopoly is believed to have been ended and American and other trade is expected to recover at the expense of the Germans.

American business men indicate that representations were made from Washington against the German practices and that they were effective in causing the Foreign Trade Council to put the Reich on an equal footing with others.

The resolution adopted by that body reads as follows:

"Whereas on Feb. 11 it was decreed that exporters should deliver to the Bank of Brazil the equivalent of 35 per cent of the total of their export bills, it was not made clear that exportation should also be made in free money. Experience shows that to receive that 35 per cent in free money, allowing on the other hand exportation in blocked money, injures Brazil's interests. Thus all exports hereafter must be paid for in free money."

Another reason for the action of the trade council was the weakness in the milreis on foreign exchange. There have been charges that German manipulation, designed to give the Reich an advantage in buying Brazilian products, was responsible for this development. The council apparently had a choice between ceasing payment on foreign debts, using the money to pay for imports or a rearrangement of conditions affecting German payments. The latter course was chosen.

Enukidze Arrested, Says London Report

Rengo

LONDON, June 1—Persistent press reports that Mr. A. S. Enukidze, Chairman of the C.T.C. of the Transcaucasian Republic of the U.S.S.R., has been arrested and is being tried for misappropriation of state funds, was confirmed here today.

It is believed that the Soviet Government will shortly announce his arrest, when the present inquiry is ended.

A NEW NOVEL

"Pilot And Shogun"

The Strange Story Of Will Adams (Miura Anjin), A Contemporary Of Shakespeare, Who Won The Confidence Of Tokugawa Iyeyasu

By JAMES A. B. SCHERER

Author of "Japan's Advance", "The Romance of Japan", etc.

The Ship in Which Will Adams reached Japan in 1600

'Dr. Scherer's presentation of "Miura Anjin" as a Japanese samurai is thrilling, and his portraiture of that bygone time has the ring of truth. His romance is real history, and I find it far superior to any historical novel of recent years. For he knows the Old Japan at first hand, and has absorbed its atmosphere. He is as much at home on the straw-mats of Nihon as in the Mermaid Tavern: and he transports his reader with him.'—Dr. Thomas Baty in The Japan Times.

MARRIED TODAY

Culminating a romance that began when they were childhood sweethearts, Miss Ruth Murphy, daughter of Mrs. Frank C. Murphy of New York City, and Mr. Charles Albert Hutchinson of the American Embassy, were married at 12:30 p.m. today at a very pretty home wedding at the residence of the American Consul and Mrs. Arthur Garrels.

Bishop C. S. Reifsnider solemnized the ceremony before an improvised altar of tall ferns. The Garrels' home was beautifully decorated with a profusion of summer flowers and the bright June sunshine, after a day of rain, emphasized the note of happiness.

The bride was attended by Miss Caroline MacMahon of the American Embassy and the groom by Lieut. Frederick P. Munson. Ushers were Mr. Morris Hughes and Mr. J. Graham Parsons.

Miss Murphy was married in a gown of pale blue mousseline de soir which was fashioned with puffed sleeves and a long skirt that formed a slight train. She carried pink roses and lilies of the valley. Miss MacMahon's gown was of cream colored silk and she carried yellow roses. Following the ceremony, a reception was held with members of the American Embassy attending.

The bride and groom were sweethearts during their childhood days at Duluth, Minnesota, where they were born and where they spent their early school days. The bride is a graduate of the University of California at Los Angeles. Following her graduation, she taught one year in a girls college and the last year she spent with her mother in New York city. She is a member of Kappa Gamma sorority. She arrived in Japan on May 29 and since then has been a guest at the Garrels' home.

Mr. Hutchinson is a graduate of the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis and a member of Sigma Psi Epsilon fraternity. He has been attached to the American Embassy here for the last four years and has been one of the popular young bachelors of the capital.

Following a short honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson will return to Tokyo and there will be numerous parties and receptions for them.

TO BE MARRIED

Another June wedding will be that of Miss Lucette Eymard, daughter of Mr. Charles Eymard of 358 Honmoku 4 chome, Yokohama, and Mr. Georg Rudolph Fachtmann of Yokohama which will be solemnized on Saturday, June 29, in Yokohama.

Both young people are well known members of the younger set and are noted in sports circles. Both are excellent tennis players and as partners, have won many tennis tournaments.

She is a member of the Y.C.A.C. girls basketball team and Mr. Fachtmann is a member of the men's team. In addition, he is a track man and one of four brothers noted for their athletic records.

Following their marriage, they are to receive at a reception at the home of the bride's father. Mr. Fachtmann is associated with the Nichizui Trading Co.

Want Suspension Of Silver Policy

Texas Congressman To Propose Selling Of Products On Barter System

Nippon Dempo-United Press

WASHINGTON, June 3.—Representative Martin Dies of Texas said today that he intended to confer with President Roosevelt and Secretary of Treasury Morgenthau regarding the substitution of a barter system for the present silver program.

Representative Dies said he would suggest the suspension of the silver purchase program for a time and an attempt to sell products especially cotton, abroad on a barter basis.

He believed that if cotton could be bartered on a basis of twelve cents a pound that exports would increase and that the United States could take advantage of the World silver price.

French Marriages Fall

The impact of the economic crisis on the French family is shown by provisional vital statistics for 1934, issued in Paris on May 11. Compared with 1933, marriages decreased by 17,000, or 6 per cent, and births by 5,300, or 1 per cent.

However, as deaths decreased by 27,000, or 4 per cent, the excess of births over deaths was nearly doubled, being 42,840. The following figures were issued:

Population, June 30, 1934, 41,940,000; marriages, 298,192; births, 677,265; deaths, 634,525.

For every 10,000 inhabitants there were 142 marriages, 161 births and 151 deaths.

Reichsbank Wants Arms Drain Eased

Warning On Public Finances Issued To Germany By The Bank's Vice President

A pointed speech warning that order in public finances is just as important as military prowess and requesting particularly that the Reichsbank be relieved of the steady drain on its resources caused by the government's "labor creation" and rearmament programs was delivered on May 11 in Berlin before a forum of Reichsbank officials by Fritz Dreyse, vice president of that institution.

The speech followed similar warnings published previously by both Herr Dreyse and Dr. Karl Blessing, Reichsbank director, behind whom stands Dr. Hjalmar Schacht's authority, although the president of the Reichsbank and Germany's Economics Minister, himself, has been keeping in the background lately.

It aroused particular attention, says Otto D. Tolischus in a dispatch to the New York Times, because it was taken to illustrate both the growing strain imposed by the government's ambitious programs on the country's financial strength as well as the growing cleavage between the financial conservatives and those Nazi economists who boast of having broken the dominance of "capitalism" in favor of the principles of "blood and soil."

No Lack of Confidence

Herr Dreyse protested in advance against any interpretation by "foreign critics" of the open discussion of the problems facing Germany as a sign of lack of confidence in her will and capabilities, saying it represented instead "consciousness of strength and confidence in our judgment of what is possible."

But since the government has failed so far to publish the budget for the current fiscal year and since the Third Reich's rulers continue to drive forward not only their rearmament program but also that for a general domestic expansion, despite a mounting flood of short-term credits and growing difficulties of raw material supply, Herr Dreyse's speech is considered to hold special significance.

After emphasizing how liberally and patriotically the Reichsbank had helped to finance the government's economic policies, Herr Dreyse declared:

"That freedom from all restraint cannot be a slogan here is known not only to the Reichsbank but above all to the government."

Warning to Government

"Both know this all the more because they are conscious of the steady control by the public at home and abroad. If the German Government attempts to improve the security of its own peace, as well as the peace of the world, by developing forces of which it is master, without dependence on the good-will of other authorities or accidental political combinations, it also knows that armaments are useless if their creation leaves no further strength to maintain and employ arms and force except at the cost of financial collapse.

"We like to dwell on the epoch of a great Prussian King (Frederick the Great) and his excellent predecessor (Frederick William I) and to draw ideas and directions from the mental and spiritual contents of State leadership at that time. But the life work of these two men are inseparable in Prussian history which taught us that the State leader who does not want to deprive himself of the military value of his defensive forces must think with equal earnestness of the order of his finances.

"'I shall be the Finance Minister and the Field Marshal of the King of Prussia and that shall be the safeguard of the King of Prussia,' said Frederick William I after he began his rule.

Joined Two Forces

"With that the armorer of that Prussia established a principle that these two pillars of the State's power belong together. And the secret of his financial art was the order which he knew how to maintain with an iron will."

Herr Dreyse thereupon recounted how the "battle of labor" had reduced unemployment and restored industry's profitableness without unduly expanding currency circulation or the Reichsbank's total of loans. Billions, he said, have been mobilized with the aid of the banks and of funds owing to Germany's foreign creditors, but not transferred because of Germany's foreign exchange difficulties.

Beyond that, however, Herr Dreyse emphasized the Reichsbank had discounted so many "labor creation bills" that they now constitute a considerable proportion of the bank's total of bill holdings.

For that reason, he continued, the "Reichsbank holds with all its power that the financing of public order should be transferred more and more to other money sources which have been opened up in money and capital markets or which could be rendered more abundant."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Cycling Fireman

Fireman Leslie Seaward, of Savannah, Ga., ended the year 1933 with a new American cycling record to his credit, following a hard struggle. Seaward has been up in the lead among American cyclists for years, and set out to do 40,000 miles or better for '33. He started out with 2,400 miles for January, and that was his lowest score for any one month. At the end of November he had turned in a total of 37,870 miles, leaving him a good distance short of his mark, so he made December an extra good month by pedaling off 5,030 miles, making his total for the year 42,900 miles, or an average of more than 117 miles a day, all during his spare time.

The $1,000,000 Raphael

The painting known as "La Madonna de la Sedia" (Madonna on the Chair) has been described as the costliest painting in the world, and hangs in the Pitti Palace at Florence. It was painted by Raphael in the dusk of a mild Italian evening, when entering a wine shop, he beheld the host's daughter as she sat crooning to an infant on her knees, while an older child stood at her side.

The sight so inspired the great painter that he determined to perpetuate it in a painting. The handiest thing around was an old wine cask, and Raphael took up its round top to execute his painting on it. It is said that after completion, he gave the painting to "mine host" in payment of his 25 cent dinner check. During his year of wandering, the great painter, when in need of money, would offer to pay for his meals with some of his handiwork executed on the spot. This "Madonna" is one of the few paintings entirely executed by the master's own hand.

Free Speech Peril Rouses Clergymen

250 Leaders In Three Faiths Ask Congress Inquiry Into Threatened Curbs

An investigation by the United States Senate Judiciary Committee of attempts to restrict freedom of the press, speech and assembly was urged on May 12 in New York City in a joint statement signed by more than 250 prominent Protestant, Catholic and Jewish clergymen from all parts of the country.

The statement was issued by the Rev. James Myers, industrial secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. It condemned recent outbursts of violence and lawless suppression of civil liberty by organized vigilantes and armed mobs which have occurred in a number of States, according to the New York Times.

Warning to Nation

"As clergymen of three faiths—Protestant, Catholic and Jewish—and citizens of all parts of the United States, we feel impelled solemnly to warn the nation against the imminent dangers which threaten our constitutional liberties of free speech, free assembly and a free press," the statement said.

"We unite in condemning as un-American what appears to be an organized and widespread effort to induce both Congress and the several States to pass laws designed further to restrict free speech, free assemblage and a free press.

"Some of the organizations sponsoring this repressive legislation are no doubt sincere in their patriotic purpose of defending Americanism, but they appear to be strangely ignorant of this country's historic principles of freedom and are now advocating measures which would in the end tend to destroy the very foundations of the Republic.

"Other organizations appear to be moved by a desire to repress demands for economic change on the part of labor and to maintain the special privileges and power which they now enjoy. They wrongly identify the present economic system with those principles of democracy for which this country stands but which have not yet been extended fully to industrial relations and the economic well-being of the masses of our people. They appear to be unaware that the purpose of the Constitution of our country was not to protect the rights and privileges of any single economic class, but—in the words of the preamble—'to promote the general welfare.'

"Our forefathers felt that the only safeguard to liberty for all was freedom of expression. This is the very essence of Americanism.

"We are opposed to the use of force and violence. It is for that very reason that we feel impelled to point out that to enact measures which would exclude any political party—no matter what its aims—from the ballot, would have the effect of encouraging violent action on the part of those groups against whom the door to orderly political action had been closed.

Even Pulpit Threatened

"Other bills which are being advocated go even further and could be construed in such a way as to restrict the very freedom of the pulpit to speak in the name of conscience against war and those preparations for war which lead to it.

"We feel that once the bars set up by the founders of our nation against restricting free speech are let down, the way will be open for further and further encroachments upon the liberties of our people, until we may be forced to tread the bitter road of dictatorship with its denial of the very fundamentals of American democracy. While the proposed measures are at present ostensibly aimed at extremists, the recent experience of other countries shows that once the civil liberty of the most extreme group has been removed, the rights of organized labor, of liberals and of the churches have also gone down in rapid succession.

"Let us beware lest in the name of Americanism we allow the destruction of our most precious American traditions. Both the Fascists and the Communists deny the rights of free speech in countries which they control, but we should abhor their common practice in this regard and should scorn to adopt their methods of suppression in our free land.

"Still more strongly do we condemn those outbursts of violence and lawless suppression of civil liberty by organized vigilantes and armed mobs which have occurred in a number of our States. Such demonstrations are a disgrace to our country and a denial of the very patriotism in whose name these acts have often been committed.

"We therefore call upon the people of our respective faiths to arouse themselves at once to these dangers which threaten our American liberties and to exert their immediate influence as citizens for the preservation and maintenance of the rights and responsibilities of free speech, free assembly and a free press, and the encouragement of free communication of mind with mind as essential to the discovery of our American form of government.

"We also urge the judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States to make an investigation of conditions throughout the country that limit the liberties guaranteed to citizens of the United States under the Constitution."

Professor Ignacy Moscicki, who has been President of Poland since 1926, celebrated his 30th anniversary as scientist and inventor last year. President Moscicki was born in Russian Poland, but had to leave his native country in his youth for political reasons. He has occupied professorial chairs in many parts of the world, and has made to date 500 inventions in the field of electro-chemistry and electro physics. 53 of these inventions have been patented so far. While occupying the highest post within the gift of his country, he has continued to be active in the scientific field and is one of the few outstanding executives of the world. Before he became President of Poland, he was a citizen of Russia and of Switzerland.

Gertrude Stein Tells Paris She Is 'Wed To America'

Gertrude Stein returned to Paris from the United States announcing: "Yes, I am married; I mean I am married to America. It is so beautiful!"

She returned in the brown tweed suit and velvet hunter's cap that she wore when she went to the United States last Fall for her first trip in twenty years, says the New York Times.

"I am going back to America some time, some day—not too long," she said. "I am already homesick for America. I never knew it was so beautiful. It was like a bachelor who goes along fine for twenty-five years and then decides to get married. That is the way I feel—I mean about America."

Social and Personal Notes

MR. AND MRS. PHELPS HONORED

A dinner in tribute to Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Phelps who will return to America this fall after 33 years in Japan, was given Thursday evening at the Y.M.C.A. in Kanda by more than 120 representatives of Japanese Christian organizations and missions.

The dinner, held under the auspices of the National Committee of the Y.M.C.A. of Japan and the Tokyo Y.M.C.A., gave proof of the high regard with which Mr. and Mrs. Phelps are held by the entire community. Mr. Hampei Nagao, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Tokyo Y.M.C.A., formerly a director of the Imperial Government Railways and a member of the Diet, presided.

Mr. and Mrs. Phelps came to Japan in 1902 when Mr. Phelps was associated with the International Committee of the Y.M.C.A. He was assigned to the position of general secretary of the association at Kyoto where he lived 14 years. He was then transferred to Tokyo and from then to the present, has served as honorary national secretary of the Y.M.C.A. of Japan. In 1919 he was senior secretary for Japan of the International Committee of the Y.M.C.A. At the time the Allied expeditionary forces were sent into Siberia, Mr. Phelps was the executive head of the extensive operations carried on by the American Y.M.C.A. in that region.

Among the speakers at the dinner Thursday evening were Mr. Nagao who outlined the service of Mr. Phelps to the cause of the Y.M.C.A. and praised his statesmanship and sound judgment in determining the fundamental policies of the institution; Prof. Tadaoki Yamamoto, chairman of the National Committee and Dean of the College of Engineering of Waseda University, who expressed deep gratitude of the leaders of the association for the wise counsel which Mr. Phelps has given; and Mrs. Matsu Tsuji, chairman of the National Committee of the Young Women's Christian Association, who spoke of the devoted and intelligent manner in which Mrs. Phelps has helped that institution. Other speakers were Dr. Yugoro Chiba, president of Kwanto Gakuin, and Dr. C. W. Iglehart of the Methodist Mission.

In responding, Mr. Phelps declared Mrs. Phelps and he felt "from the bottom of our hearts that you owe us nothing and that we owe you everything for the generous manner in which you have enriched life for us during these 33 years."

Among the leaders present were: Dr. and Mrs. K. Ibuka, Bishop Motozo Akazawa of the Methodist Church, Bishop Yonetaro Matsui of the Seikokai (Episcopal Church), Miss Michiko Kawai, General Shinryo Hibiki, Dr. and Mrs. Kyugoro Obata, Mr. and Mrs. Yasuji Shimizu, Mr. and Mrs. Keisuke Sajima, Mr. Takayuki Namae, Mr. Makoto Ebisawa, Mr. and Mrs. Yataro Kobayashi, Mrs. Taki Shidachi, Prof. and Mrs. Enkichi Kan, Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Bowles, Bishop and Mrs. C. S. Reifsnider, Dr. and Mrs. C. W. Igleheart, Mr. and Mrs. John Struthers, Dr. G. F. Draper, Dr. D. B. Schneder, Miss A. C. Heartshorne, Mr. and Mrs. Soichi Saito, Mr. Shoichi Murao, Mr. and Mrs. T. Hori, Dr. Tatsuo Tanaka, Mr. S. Imamura, Mr. S. Murakami, Mr. M. Omura, Mr. Takeji Komatsu and Mr. S. Yoshioka.

Foes Of Long Rally To Hear Wallace Reply

Long's "share the wealth" movement was a side issue.

"Let's keep our eyes on the goal of recovery and not be irritated by personal attacks, nor diverted by side issues," he said.

'Sniping helps rather than hurts our campaign. It's mistake to hold too many expectations for any industry, as some snipers attempt to do. Our program rests on two firm pillars, the farmers and the President."

American people are not faced with a food shortage, Wallace said in his address. The agricultural program has reduced production for an export market that no longer exists and it has not deprived the American people of "an ounce of necesary food."

"As long as labor, industry and finance have governmental powers, agriculturalists must insist upon their fair shares of power also.

'The A.A.A. borrowed the centralizing power of government so that agriculture might at least win back a little of its fair share of the national income," Wallace said, adding that the cry to take away these powers has not come from "any large number of farmers. They know that a moderate use of these governmental powers has helped put them back on their feet.

Processing Tax, Farmers' Tariff

"The processing tax is the farmers' tariff; the marketing agreement and licenses are the farmers' corporation laws. When industry is willing to repeal the statutes authorizing will be willing to abandon the processing tax; when business agrees to repeal the statutes authorizing corporations, agriculture will gladly abandon marketing agreements and licenses," Wallace declared.

"It is around the cotton-adjustment program and processing tax that the enemies of the New Deal for agriculture have rallied. They haven't quite got the nerve to say the cotton farmer is making too much money, but if they win their fight against the cotton program the cotton farmer will certainly be making far less money."

Expert Regards Normandie As Ship Of Future

French Line's Director In London Upholds Switch To Super-Liner Building

Replying to criticisms raised in some quarters over the wisdom of building super-liners of the Normandie's size, Pierre de Malglaive, resident director of the French Line in London, has gone on record as having unshaken faith in the policy of building this type of vessel which, he believes, is the trans-Atlantic liner of the future.

M. de Malglaive, who is well known in the United States having served as recent director of the French Line at New York several years, made known his views following a recent inspection of the Normandie at St. Nazaire. A copy of his statement was received in New York recently, the account of which in the New York Herald Tribune follows:

"Six years ago," said M. de Malglave, "when we first discussed the question of new tonnage for our North Atlantic service, there were two schools of thought. Some of my colleagues on the board of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique (French Line) were in favor of a sistership to the Ile de France, perhaps a few feet longer and wider in the beam.

Fought for His Idea

"My view was that if we wanted to attract the passengers it was essential to have the best possible equipment, and I had to fight tooth and nail to get my idea accepted. It is interesting to note at about the same time the Cunard Line was faced with a similar problem, and quite independently reached the same conclusions."

In discussing economy of operation for various types of trans-Atlantic liners, Mr. de Malglaive said he is of the opinion that big ships were a much better proposition than smaller vessels. He pointed out that he recently investigated the amount of tonnage necessary to transport annually 1,000,000 passengers across the North Atlantic and had satisfied himself that ten ships of the size of the Normandie and the Queen Mary would be ample for the purpose. On the other hand, if one decided to build ships of 30,000 tons, with speeds of from 22 to 23 knots, one would need about thirty liners to do the same work, he thought.

The French Line official pointed out that in 1927 ships of the North Atlantic Passenger Conference made some 2,000 crossings, in the course of which they carried 600,000 passengers. This represented a tremendous waste of carrying capacity, he said.

Would Organize Traffic

Mr. de Malglaive said that at the present time all of the trans-Atlantic lines were fighting with their backs to the wall for passenger traffic and said that the time had come when the various companies concerned should organize the traffic on a better basis. He urged that agreements be entered into between the United States, France, Great Britain and Germany, and said that if they were to rationalize their respective services it should be possible for each to make a little money.

The Normandie, which is about completed, soon will leave St. Nazaire for her official sea trials, with a number of observers aboard. The giant liner, which is the world's biggest vessel, will sail from Havre May 29 on her initial voyage for New work, and is due here on June 3. Shipping experts would not be surprised if she captures the mythical "Atlantic Blue Ribbon" on the first crossing.

The Cunard White Star Lines' new flagship, Queen Mary, which will be almost the same size as the Normandie, is being completed at Clydebank, Scotland, and will not enter service until next year.

It is understood that the British and French lines have reached an agreement to stagger the sailings of the two great liners at least a week apart so as to avoid costly competition.

Reported Interested in Ships

Although the established American-flag trans-Atlantic services as yet have not shown any great enthusiasm over building superliners in this country an unnamed group is reported interested in a program to build two 50,000-ton liners for operation between Boston, England, France and Germany.

The United States Lines, which has been very successful with the luxury cabin liners Washington and Manhattan, is planning to build a third ship of this type and later may construct a fourth vessel. Plans for the new United States liner have been completed by Gibbs & Cox, well known New York naval architects, and are said to call for a vessel of approximately 30,000 gross tons with a speed of twenty-six knots.

The leading shipyards of the United States soon will be invited to bid on the construction of the proposed liner, which the company hopes to have ready for service late next year or early in 1937.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Memory Wizard

Fernando de Cordoba (1422-1480) is one of the few men who really deserved the description of "Admirable" applied to them by contemporaries. He was gifted with such incredible memory powers that he completely memorized the Bible at the age of 10. By the time he reached the age of 20, he knew by heart all the works of Aristotle, St. Thomas Aquinas, John Duns Scotus, Nicolas de Lira, Hippocrates, Galen, Avicenna, and Albertus Magnus. His ability to recite any passage out of this vast library, without an error, was so incredible, that for a time he was strongly suspected of witchcraft. In addition, he was a valorous soldier and a philologist who mastered 17 languages. He was also the champion swordsman of his day. In accordance with the custom then prevailing, the Castilian King sent him to Rome to meet all comers. He was the master of them all in the field of the spirit as well as in physical combat. He was doctor of music, astronomy, medicine, theology and the arts, and a great favorite with Pope Sixtus IV and Alexander VI.

Skiing With Wings New Sport In Austrian Tyrol

Folk in the Austrian Tyrol mountains rub their eyes at a giant bat which seems to soar through the crisp air some 35 feet up. It's the Viennese ski expert, Krupka, trying out a new sport. With wings on his toes he feels far more dashing than that English lady of Banbury Cross who rode a white horse and had rings on her fingers and bells on her toes, according to the traditional song.

Krupka has just made a flight of 235 feet with this outfit, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

Is this beginning of a new era in winter sports, with enthusiasts flapping about snow-covered mountain sides.

It almost seems to offer an opportunity for gliding experts and skiers to get together and perfect a thrilling pastime.

The Ruins

The sad-looking man in the tenement area leaned over the banisters and caught the visitor before she could disappear down a hole in the staircase.

"I wonder," said the visitor indignantly, "the landlord doesn't do something to repay this deplorable building?"

"Well," said the slum dweller, philosophically, "he was going to do something about it until he went on a tour to Naples and saw the ruins of Pompeii. Now he thinks this isn't too bad."—Tit-Bits.

BUFFET DINNER

Mr. R. G. Marshall of the United Press and Mrs. Marshall are entertaining this evening at a buffet dinner which is a welcome for Mr. Frank Hedges who recently returned to Japan after a long absence to become temporary managing editor of The Japan Advertiser.

Guests at the party included chiefly men and women engaged in newspaper work in Tokyo and wives of newspaper men. The Marshall's attractive home in Reinanzaka, Akasaka-ku, is decorated with an abundance of spring flowers and flower arrangements which Mrs. Marshall, who has made a hobby of Japanese flower arrangement, has done.

Guests are Mr. and Mrs. Glen Babb, Mr. George Bronson Rea, adviser to the government of Manchoukuo who recently returned from Washington, D.C., Mr. and Mrs. A. Balk, Mr. Don Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Byas, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Catto, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Chamberlin, Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Fleisher, Mr. and Mrs. Jan Fabius, Mr. Theodor Findahl, Mr. A. Mecs, Mr. C. R. Sorge, Mr. and Mrs. Burton Crane, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Wright who have recently arrived from New York where Mr. Wright is a staff member of the Daily News, Mr. and Mrs. James Young, Mr. and Mrs. James Rabbit, Miss Tliton who is visiting her sister, Mrs. Rabbit; Mr. C. C. Chapman, Mr. Whiteing, Dr. Lily Abegg, Miss Margit Gantenbein, Mr. and Mrs. Graham, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Brown, and Miss Rose McKee.

ENTERTAINING THIS EVENING

The American Consul and Mrs. Richard F. Boyce of Yokohama are entertaining this evening at the American consulate in honor of the members of the Pacific Young People's Society and the Japan Cultural Forum—the organizations of foreign born Japanese.

A reception is being held and it will be followed by a buffet dinner.

The P.Y.P.S. will give a play, "Onsha No Kanatani" at the Nippon Seinenkan on June 20. The entertainment this evening is one of the numerous social functions which is being given for the cast.

Y.C.A.C. ENTERTAINMENT

Members of the Y.C. aind A.C. will be treated this evening to a special performance by Malini, the well known magician. The program will begin at 9 p.m. and will be followed by a dance. Sunday the club will see a cinema program which includes "Whom the Gods Destroy" with Robert Young and Doris Kenyon and "Lady by Choice," starring May Robson. Winners in the club's spring tennis tournament are Mr. G. E. Beatty, Mr. F. R. Harriss, Miss L. Eymard. Mr. G. R. Fachtmann, Miss D. Edwards and Mr. M. L. Russell.

INTERESTING CONCERT

The Schumann-Memorial-Concert takes place on Tuesday June 11 at 7 p.m. in the Nihon Seinenkan hall. The program promises to be a very interesting one.

The cycle "Spanisches Liedespiel" will be performed for the first time in Japan. It is a cycle of love songs, translated from Spanish into German by Geibel. Those, who take part in the solos, duets and quartets are Miss Ywava, Mrs. Yotsuya, Mr. Otaguro and Mr. Tokuyama. All are pupils of Mrs. Nekke except Mr. Otaguro, who studied in Paris, but now studies the German songs with her too. Miss Iwaya had an unexpected success as "Marzelline" in Fidelio as well as Mr. Otaguro, who for the first time sang in German as "Florestan". People were surprised and delighted by these two young Japanese artists, who both were heartily applauded applauded after their arias. Mrs. Yotsuya is a very well known alto and she and Mr. Tokuyama, whose beautiful baritone and able acting on the stage is well known in Japan, are Victor artists.

Miss Sonoko Inouye, whose recent concert was an outstanding success, will play the famous "Carnival" one of Schumann's most famous composition and very much liked by the Japanese. After her success last week one can expect an unusual treat in hearing this gifted young pianist. No. 3 on the program is Schumann's "Dichterliebe" another cycle of songs, poems by Heine, Mrs. Netke sang it some years ago in Japan and the Japanese enjoyed the whole cycle in her rendition so much that she was asked to sing it again. The words have been translated into Japanese and the Japanese singers all are familiar with the songs.

For the first time, Viscount Konoye will appear as a pianist. The piano in the songs has such an important part that it cannot be considered merely as an accompaniment, but as chamber-music.

Tickets for the concert are available at the Play-Guide, and music stores on the Ginza.

FLOWER ARRANGEMENTS

June, the month of weddings in western countries, is the month of flower arrangement exhibits in Japan. In Tokyo there are now several big displays now being held. Even a spring furniture sale furnishes an occasion for many really artistic floral compositions.

At the Ueno Art Gallery until June 14, is a "one man show" of flower arrangement, believed one of the largest of its kind. It is common for a number of various flower teachers to combine their working in holding an exhibit but Mrs. J. Oshikawa with 30 of her teachers more than 200 pupils, is holding an exhibit of only her own school.

Today is open house for foreigners. Cards have been mailed but every one is welcome and there are English speaking guides to answer questions.

Cancer 'Cures' Disappointing, Bellevue Finds

Several Types Tried In '34; Serum Test Inconclusive, Goldwater Report Says

Experiments with cancer "cures" are touched upon in the annual report of Bellevue Hospital, forwarded to Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York by Dr. S. S. Gollwater, Commissioner of Hospitals, says the New York Times.

"The Radiation Therapy Division tested during the year several alleged cancer remedies," Dr. Goldwater said. "The results were disappointing, especially in the case of a remedy which exhibited remarkable destructive properties on animal tumors, but which was found to have no therapeutic value for human tumors.

"Studies are proceeding on an anti-cancer serum, but the number of cases thus far tested with this serum is too small to warrant conclusion. The need of adequate ward facilities for the Cancer Service at Bellevue is stressed.

Bellevue Hospital, according to the report, "has acquired a new type of portable X-ray apparatus, said to be the first of its kind in the world, by which irradiation for a long period of time, at a low intensity, is substituted for more intense irradiation applied for shorter periods, which in many cases failed to give the desired results.

The new apparatus is capable of delivering the designated type of X-rays to the patient over a continuous period of twenty-four hours, while the patient remains in bed. This new type of treatment is being tried out in the treatment of Hodgkins's disease, leukemia, lypho-sarcoma, unresolved pneumonia and generalized cancer."

Commissioner Goldwater notes in his report that the construction of the "new" Bellevue Hospital has dragged along for more than thirty years, and that the most important institution in the Department of Hospitals, rated as one of the largest and most active hospitals in the world, is still unfinished. The report adds:

"Early this year Bellevue construction was resumed. Pavilion C and D, now under construction, will permit of a far more satisfactory handling or routine admissions, of emergency treatments, and of hospital visitors; there will be an expanded service with up-to-date equipment for the Division of Tuberculosis, and some additional dormitory space for graduate nurses and internes. Improved dietary service will result from decentralization of the kitchen and dining-room service. The volume of work which is required to be done in the central kitchen and the distances which must be covered between the central kitchen and outlying yards are such as to make it almost impossible to conduct a dietary service satisfactory to ward patients and to the staff.

"Bellevue's total expenditures in 1934 amounted to $2,862,000. Out of this total, $1,820,000 was expended for personal services. Food supplies accounted for $446,000, medical and surgical supplies, $271,000, and fuel, $112,000. The daily per capita food cost for patients, staff and nurses was 27 cents.

"Days of hospital treatment in 1934 numbered 858,214; average daily census, 2,189; average length of stay of each patient, 13.9 days. Ambulance calls numbered 22,278, surgical operations, 11,320; dispensary visits, 602,819. The total mortality was 3,694; of this number, 2,194 deaths were due to medical conditions, 991 to surgical conditions, 498 to psychopathic conditions, and 260 to cancer. Only eleven deaths were due to maternal conditions."

11-year-old Solo Flier

A few months ago young Roscoe Brinton, 16, of Pittsfield, Mass., received his student pilot's license, a document he had waited five years to obtain after he had soloed his plane. Under the tutorship of his father and the late Lowell Bayles, a former holder of the world's speed record for land planes, Roscoe flew a plane alone at the tender age of eleven. At that time he hoped to obtain his license with no trouble at all, but a regulation of 1931 grounded him until he reached the age of 16. After finishing high school, Roscoe hopes to attain fame and fortune via aviation, and we wish "Happy Landings".

82 Conflagrations In One Factory

On June 26, 1932, fire finally laid waste to the Stowers Packing Co. factory in Scranton, Pennsylvania, and it might be said that the gods of fire had well earned their prize. Since the night of May 20, 1926, when flames first seared the interior of the building, the shrill wail of the fire sirens had become familiar music to the residents nearby. In that year the Stowers plant had two more fires, in 1927 only one, in 1928 five, in 1929 eighteen, in 1930 another single fire, in 1931 thirty fires. In 1932 the Fire Department responded twenty-four times before the structure was finally destroyed. Officials of the fire fighting forces believed that most of the Stowers Co.'s 82 fires were of incendinary origin.

French Women's Vote Is Feature Of Election

to vote and be elected at Parliamentary and municipal elections. Second, she organized, at the Paris municipal elections, a number of unofficial polling stations, at which votes for women candidates were received, counted, and published. Third, she has been attracting attention by such demonstrations as marching to the site of the Bastille and there knocking off symbolic cardboard chains from the wrists of shackled women or throwing poudre de riz into the faces of the policemen who interfered.

Opposition Tactics

Attention has certainly been attracted by all these proceedings, and the municipal elections certainly supplied an excuse for vigorous protest. For there might have been a prospect that the municipal vote for women could have been obtained, and the first step towards the franchise taken, if the opponents of the movement had not, with diabolical ingenuity, caused the full proposal to be voted by the Chamber, in order that the Senate, where there has always been a majority against the suffragists, should have an excuse for holding the whole thing up.

The existing women's suffrage organizations in France are three. They are the Ligue Francaise pour les Droits de la Femme, founded in 1882, president Madame Maria Verone, the well-known barrister; the Union Francaise pour le Suffrage des Femmes, founded in 1909 by Madame Brunschweig, who still directs it; and the Union Nationale pour le Vote de Femmes, founded in 1920, president the Duchesse de La Rochefoucauld.

The political disabilities of the French woman are not the only one which the reformers are determined to remove. A married woman is not legally entitled to travel, to carry on a profession, or to open a banking account without the written permission of her husband, who cannot only prevent her from buying or selling investments or from going to law, but can dissipate her money without her authority unless she has been carefully protected by a marriage contract.

Women Barristers

The existence of these legal restrictions on feminine liberty in France are the more surprising as there are many professions in which women have long since established their right to practise side by side with men. There have been women barristers since 1900, and there are now three hundred of them. There have been women doctors since 1881—sixteen years later than in England—and there are now over a thousand. There are seven million women who earn wage or salary. Of these, 140,000 are Civil Servants and 500,000 are in charge of commercial or industrial enterprises.

Indeed, the capable woman of business in France is an institution of longer date than in England. There have been famous examples in the upper bourgeoisie, and, as for the lower, there is hardly a small tradesman or artisan in France whose wife is not his cashier or who would make a business decision without consulting her.

France, in fact, has long been a woman's country. Perhaps that is why many Frenchwomen seem to care little about possessing the outward signs of power; but it may also be why many others are determined to have them.

Social and Personal Notes

MANSION IS OPENED AT BIG HOUSEWARMING

Mr. and Mrs. Iwajiro Yasuda entertained 107 guests Sunday evening at a housewarmiing party at their beautiful new mansion in Kudan.

Although the party included more than 100 guests, the Yasuda home, which was completed early this spring, is so large that at no time did the rooms seem crowded Sunday evening. Dancing was enjoyed in the large atelier and a buffet supper which included a wide variety of tasty foods, both Japanese and foreign, was served in the dining room. In the center of the heavily laden table was a large cake bearing the inscription, "In honor of the opening of your new home," which had been presented by one of the guests.

The den next to the atelier was popular with the men who met there for refreshments and to smoke and talk during the course of the evening.

Many guests enjoyed the observation tower on the top of the mansion, from which they overlooked the entire downtown section of the capital with its bright lights. The Mitsukoshi department store, the New Grand restaurant, and the Nichi Nichi Shimbun building were among the key structures which the guests picked out from the sparkling panorama below them.

Two large living rooms and a sun room were also opened for the guests and many delighted in the charming English style garden with its waterfalls, fountain and pool and many comfortable chairs and benches, which is laid out in front of the home. At the side of the house, the guests admired the quiet Japanese garden.

There are between 30 and 40 rooms in the Yasuda mansion, some of which are decorated in modernistic and some in old English style. During the evening, Mr. and Mrs. Yasuda received many congratulations from the guests who joined in their happiness.

TO GIVE PLAY

For the first time, a group of foreign-born Japanese, all citizens of other countries, will produce a Japanese drama in the English language.

As a contribution toward the interpretation of distinctly native drama in the English language, the Pacific Young Peoples' Society, one of the largest organized groups of these overseas young people, will present Kikuchi Kwan's dramatized version of his famous prose tale, Onshu no Kanatani, at the Nippon Seinenkan on Thursday evening, June 20.

Another purpose of the presentation is the raising of a fund for carrying on the work of Society.

During the past week the entire membership of the America-Japan Society and the American Associations of Tokyo and Yokohama have been asked to become Patrons of the coming effort. Already a number of prominent citizens and foreign residents have responded, among whom are Prince Iyesato Tokugawa, President of the America-Japan Society, the American Counsellor and Mrs. Neville, the American Consul General and Mrs. Garrels, Major and Mrs. W. C. Crane, Consul and Mrs. J. H. Chapman, Consul and Mrs. Richard F. Boyce, Mr. and Mrs. O. Prasosman, the American Commercial Attache, Mr. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Fleisher, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Andrews, the Rt. Rev. John McKim, D. D., the Rt. Rev. and Mrs. Charles S. Reifsnider, Captain Truman M. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Takashi Komatsu, Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Bowles, Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Moss, Mr. T. P. Davis of Yokohama, Mr. and Mrs. Keisaburo Hashimoto, Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Cary, Mr. Harry M. Cary, Mr. and Mrs. George N. Coe, Mr. Teizo Shiohara, Mr. Kanichiro Matsumoto, Mr. Paul Rusch, Mr. Setsuichi Aoki of the International Cultural Society, Mr. and Mrs. Tokumatsu Mikimoto, Mr. Tokuya Sakurauchi, Mr. Momomaro Yoshii of Yokohama, Mr. and Mrs. Tokutaro Sakai, Mr. and Mrs. Konosuke Koike, Mr. and Mrs. Jinnosuke Takaku, Mr. and Mrs. Russell L. Durgin, Mr. Sentaro Miyabe, Mr. George Hayes, Mr. Tadao Kamiya and Mr. J. H. Covell of Yokohama.

The members of the Society are rehearsing the drama four times a week at Holy Trinity Parish House, Aoyama under the direction of Mr. Ehiro Okakura, one of the directors of the Tsukiji Little Theater. Mr. Okakura has produced the well-known play several times in the past at the Tsukiji Theater. Professional scenery experts and other assistants are moulding the play into excellent shape. Miss Himeko Nishikawa of Venice, California, will play the leading lady's role, the part of Oyuni. Miss Nishikawa brings to the part considerable experience of past dramatic work in American schools. Mr. Satoru Sugimura of Honolulu, now a student at Meiji University, will play the leading man's role of Ichikiro. Mr. Toshio Tsukahira of Los Angeles will play the role of Saburobyoe Nagawa in the first act and the part of the first stone cutter in the third act. Mr. Kazuo Ikeda of Salinas, California now a student at Waseda University plays the difficult role of Jitsunosuke Nakagawa, the filial son who comes in the third act to avenge his father's death. Miss Kimiko Yamada of Quadaloupe, California and Mr. Hajime Watanabe of Long Beach, Cal., play the parts of the young couple who are murdered in the lonely wooded pass in the second act, and Mr. Shoichiro Matsumoto of Honolulu, and President of the Society plays the part of Gensaku in the second act and the third peasant in the third act.

Those appearing in the third act are Mr. Tadao Yamada of Quadaloupe, Cal., as the Old Man, Miss Hatsumi Ohama of Los Angeles, the Woman Pedlar, M. Makio Toshirogi of Salt Lake City, Utah, the first peasant, Mr. Yutaka Nii of Pala, Maiu, T. H., second peasant, Mr. Kiyoshi Miura, of San Jose, Cal., fourth peasant, and Mr. Michikata Nishimoto of Los Angeles, second stone cutter.

Members of the Tokyo Amteur Dramatic Club are assisting in rounding off the spoken lines. Mr. Tadao Kaneko is assisting Mr. Okakura in the coaching of Japanese action.

Mr. Kaju Nakamura, member of the Diet and head of the Oriental Cultural College, Prof. Takizo Matsumoto of Meiji University, Miss Miya Sannomiya formerly of the Y.W.C.A. and now a staff member of the International Cultural Society, and Prof. Paul Rusch of St. Paul's University are the active advisors of the group. Last Sunday afternoon the group held a large garden party at the residence of Mr. Takarazu in Daimachi, Akasaka at which the Society were hosts to some seventy members of the various English speaking society groups of Tokyo universities.

World Bank Gives Fraser A Gold Bar

Retiring President's Gift Is Hollowed Out To Form Unique Cigarette Box

The board and management of the Bank for International Settlements presented at Basle on May 12 to Leon Fraser, who retired from the presidency on May 13, a gold bar from the vaults of the Swiss National Bank.

Because the United States might confiscate such a hoard when Mr. Fraser returns home the members of the board had enough of the center removed to make the bar serve as a cigarette box. The top is so cleverly hinged that from the outside it is impossible to distinguish the bar from any other.

Close examination shows the top bears the autographs of Montagu Norman of the Bank of England, Jean Tannery of the Bank of France, Dr. Hjalmar Schacht of the Reichsbank, Professor G. Bachmann of the Swiss National Bank, Louis Franck of the Belgian National Bank, Dr. L. J. A. Trip of the Netherlands Bank, who will succeed Mr. Fraser as president of the World Bank, and other donors.

The donors are reported to believe that this is the world's only gold bar cigarette case. Collectively they have billions of dollars worth of gold bars under their key.

The gift was presented by Dr. Trip at a luncheon for Mr. Fraser. The Italian directors gave Mr. Fraser a beautiful old Roman silver cup, the Germans gave a large antique German silver plate, the Japanese presented some Japanese paintings and France named him a grand officer in the Legion of Honor.

Mr. Fraser, who has been on the bank's board since its foundation and has presided since 1933 at the monthly meetings of the big European central bank governors, will submit to them his last annual report at the general assembly tomorrow. The report is awaited with considerable interest because it is known to be the most comprehensive survey of the world situation that the bank has done.

Twenty-three of the twenty-five member central banks will be represented at the assembly, only Latvian and Bulgarian bankers being absent.

James M. Nicely, head of the Paris branch of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, arrived today to vote American shares and Nelson Dean Jay of Morgan et Cie. of Paris arrived to confer on the Dawes loan, of which the is a trustee.

At the meeting on May 12 of the governors they decided that one of the French directors, Marquis de Vogue, president of the Suez Canal, would succeed Dr. Trip as vice chairman of the board.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Washington Or Death

When Korea opened diplomatic relations with the United States in 1888, the King designated his friend Pak Pansa to be the first Korean Ambassador to Washington. Pak, who had never been outside the walls of his native city, protested vehemently, on the grounds that he had never traveled. The King ordered him to proceed to Washington or suffer decapitation, and Pak Pansa yielded to this argument. When about to board the United States vessel "Omaha" which was to give him free transportation, His Excellency fainted when he heard the ship's whistle. He had to be carried aboard.

When he arrived in Washington, the street urchins, who marveled at his strange attire, vexed the Ambassador until he packed up and returned to Korea, preferring death to diplomacy. He was eventually forgiven, but he had to spend a few months outside the walls of the city, purifying himself in prayer and humility, before his "resignation" was accepted.

Coughlin Urges Bonus In Plea To Roosevelt

The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, in a radio address at Detroit, Mich., on May 12 prepared for delivery to his National Union for Social Justice appealed directly to President Roosevelt to sign the Patman Bonus Bill "in the name of the greatest lobby the people ever established."

"You were called demagogue for uttering the same philosophy which I utter today, for reminding the people of the forgotten man," the priest said in his remarks addressed to President Roosevelt. "You were called demagogue by the same forces that oppose us today."

The next meeting of the National Union, Father Coughlin announced, would be on May 22 in Madison Square Garden, New York City.

"I cannot believe that you would demand that the taxpayers pay 11,900,000,000 bonus to the bankers simply because the soldier is entitled to be paid $2,400,000,000," Father Coughlin said in addressing the President. "I cannot believe that you will prevent the soldier from receiving his just dollar of dues simply because the banker is not to receive his unjust 81 cents of the bonus."

"You have told the people you would drive the money changers from the temple and restore the ancient truth," he added. "You have told them of a new deal, a new deal for the forgotten man.

"May I remind you bluntly that in the trying days of 1932 when this nation of ours was in the "slough of despond," when there was no philosophy abroad in the land except the philosophy of rugged individualism, I threw into your battle all the strength of my mind, all the power of my endurance in order to enthuse a depressed people with a view of a new order, with a view of a New Deal."

"The real issue," the priest declared, "is the right to issue the currency of this nation. The question is whether that currency be the currency of the United States provided under the same Constitution which contributes your (the President's) veto power, or whether it be the currency of the privately owned Federal Reserve Bank, the bank that brought us to our present low estate."

Il Duce Warns Powers To Let Ethiopia Alone

for doing too little when it is a question of the safety of our colonies and the life of even a single one of our native or metropolitan soldiers.

Ready to Name Conciliators

With regard to the diplomatic development of the controversy it is known that we have not refused to confer with representatives of the Ethiopian Government. We have already for some time communicated with Addis Ababa that we were disposed on our side to name two representatives for Italy on the conciliation committee.

But it is our duty not to harbor any dangerous illusions, in view of the noteworthy Ethiopian armaments and the advanced preparations for Ethiopian mobilization, and above all else the state of mind dominating Addis Ababa, especially among the minor chieftains who are hostile to any accord whatsoever with Italy.

As to Europe, and her regrettable imminent eventualities that might come about, I desire to reconfirm to the Senate that we will maintain under arms for all the time necessary the three classes of 1911, 1913 and 1914. Moreover, another class, that of 1912, is in reserve and ready.

Holds 800,000 Troops Enough

I believe a total of 800,000 to 900,000 soldiers is sufficient to guarantee our security. They are men perfectly trained, with morale that it is no exaggeration to say is superb.

16 Of Divine's Cult Show Mental Ills

Only 2 Out Of 18 Observed Found Free Of Well-Defined Psychoses

Of eighteen followers of Father Divine, New York Negro preacher and self-appointed God, who were taken to Bellevue Hospital in New York City for observation, sixteen were found to have well-defined psychoses, Drs. Zuleika Yarrell and Lauretta Bender said in a paper presented recently to the American Psychiatric Association, in Washington D. C.

Two of those received at the hospital were not considered insane, but were committed for observation after they were charged with neglecting their children, according to the New York Times report. One refused a widow's pension with the statement that "God will provide."

Eight of the cases were maniac depressive psychoses, said an abstract of the paper made public by the association.

"This group of cases are of special interest, since it has been possible to trace the mechanism of the psychosis through the religious experiences," said Drs. Yarrell and Bender.

"Normally it would be expected that the excitements would quiet down (after the meeting) as it does in the majority of the followers after they have left the gathering, but in some cases they continue preaching after they get on the streets and are brought into the hospital in an excitement in which the content was entirely concerned with the teachings of the Father Divine movement.

Primitive Behavior Develops

"In other cases the excitement has been precipitated by the religious experience, but develops into a behavior which is often much more primitive and may be characterized of the primitive Negro with primitive dancing and chanting nonsense rhyme."

The gatherings consist of banquets called "Kingdoms of Heaven" at which the "angels" combine a meal with a religious exercise. To join one of these "kingdoms," the "angels" are forced to give up all their belongings, their families and sexual life, the doctors said.

Almost all the patients, it was declared were found to possess the idea that Father Divine was omnipotent.

"Father Divine's followers are estimated at 55,000,000", said Dr. Yarrell and Bender, "and he is considered quite successful financially as well as in extricating himself from the many legal entanglements in which he has been involved."

The followers of Father Divine are not all Negroes. The report told of the finding of one white follower with epilepsy, and "with a marked affinity for religiosity which caused her to come all the way from California to see Father Divine, and change her name to 'Fidelity Serene.'

Patients Needed Treatment

The eighteen followers of Father Divine who were taken to the psychopathic ward of Bellevue Hospital included several white men and women, said officials at the hospital. They added that the Divine followers who needed care were cases requiring six to twelve months of treatment. "Most of the patients suffered from depressive psychosis," it was explained.

Father Divine first came to public notice four years ago when he conducted a revival mission at Sayville, L. I., which was called "Heaven." Because of the shrieking and shouting of converts who went to "Heaven," neighbors complained.

Soon afterward he was convicted of a charge of maintaing a public nuisance and on June 4, 1932, Supreme Court Justice Lewis J. Smith, sitting at Mincola, L. I., sentenced him to serve a year in the Suffolk Country jail and to pay a fine of $500. Justice Smith died a few days later.

Father Divine appealed and won a reversal in the Appellate Division in Brooklyn on Jan. 9, 1933.

Since then he has appeared in the courts several times. On April 15, he and his evangelical assistant, Faithful Mary, were acquitted in the Court of Special Sessions of a charge of conducting a children's boarding house at one of their peace misisons in Harlem without a Board of Healthy permit.

On March 1 Divine admitted to Justice Jacob Panken in Children's Court that he was not God, "but millions of people think I am" and "lots say I'm the devil." Divine made a compulsory appearance in court in connection with a case in which one of his adherents was accused of abandoning her 14-year-old daughter to live in Divine's principal "Heaven" in Harlem, headquarters for "Heavens" in other cities.

'Average' Pupils Held Neglected

Dr. Wile Declares Only The Handicapped Get Benefits Of 'Finest Educations'

The employment of "too much common sense rather than the needed uncommon sense" in the education of school children was held to be partly responsible for the fact that 300,000 children appear yearly in the juvenile courts and that 262,000 are retarded in the New York City public schools, by Dr. Ira S. Wile in an address at the Chanin Auditorium recently, says the New York Times.

Dr. Wile, who is a physician, educator and author, said further that only the physically and mentally handicapped children were able under the present system to obtain "the finest type of education" and that only the blind, mute, deaf, physically crippled or mentally disabled benefited from "special thought in the field of education."

Dr. Wile addressed a group of psychiatrists, educators and clubwomen at a conference on "The Retarded Child." The conference was a feature of the annual meeting of the Special School Association of the United States, which includes special schools for mentally retarded and exceptional children.

Speeches Are Discussed

Other speakers on the program were Dr. Smith Ely Jelliffe, psychiatrist and author, and Miss Elizabeth A. Walsh, inspector of ungraded classes for children of retarded mental development of the New York public schools. Rudolph S. Fried, president of the association, was the chairman. An open forum followed each speech.

Referring to the lack of uncommon sense, Dr. Wile said:

"Mediocrity prevails where genius is required. Common sense becomes the sop for ignorance. It may have value in temporary existence, but it cannot be the sound foundation for a constructive educational policy.

"Common sense is partly responsible for the 300,000 children who appear yearly in our juvenile courts. Common sense may account for the 262,000 children retarded in the New York City schools. Retardation, disciplinary problems, failures, truancy and the 675,000 children in the schools of this country, termed problem children by the White House conference, demand a form of attention that is founded upon more than the traditional values of common sense.

"The so-called 'frills and follies' of our educational institutions, nature study, music, art and physical education are more constructive forces in enabling people to live vitally and happily than are the so-called fundamental three R's. Reading, writing and arithmetic may still play their part in the common sense thinking of people, but today their place in education is distorted and their values over-emphasized."

Large New Bridge Opened By Danes

All Denmark celebrated on May 14 as King Christian opened the gigantic new Little Belt bridge, the $8,000,000 engineering work connecting the island of Fuenen with Jutland. The occasion also marked the start of the Danish State Railway's new streamlined trains, revolutionizing Denmark's rail service and cutting traveling times by 25 to 50 per cent.

Two tranis brought to Fredericia from Copenhagen 700 official guests, among them Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, the United States Minister. King Christian arrived aboard his yacht the Dannebrog, and after declaring the bridge open, embarked on a train to ride across the huge structure, which was gaily decorated with flags and bunting, to a festival here. A crowd of 150,000 was expected to greet him, but owing to a heavy snow this morning only 30,000 were present.

Navy and army airplanes circled overhead as the train passed across the bridge. A radio car broadcast the ceremonies to Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Germany. Tonight there were festivals in all towns around the Little Belt strait.

The bridge, the largest ever built in Continental Europe, was begun in 1927 and is three-quarters of a mile long. It rises 312 feet at its high point. Its piers have been sunk 121 feet below the surface of the water.

The new "lightning trains" are modeled partly after Diesel-engined trains the general director of the State Railways studied in the United States last Summer.

The new fast service is expected to make Denmark the gateway of Scandinavia since it will greatly reduce the time of traveling from Northern Scandinavia to England, France, Western Germany and Southern Europe, while enhancing the commercial and industrial importance of Denmark and exercising a great influence in the cultural development of the more remote parts.

Barnard Dean Urges Graduates To Marry

Dean Virginia C. Gildersleeve of Barnard College, noted institution of learning for women in the eastern U.S., in her annual message of advice to members of the graduating class at an assembly in Barnard Hall on May 14, urged the students to take time off from their future occupations long enough to rear families. She also advised them not to seek employment in the usual fields open to women but to create interesting jobs for themselves.

"You can be a volunteer worker and make yourself useful in politics," she declared, "for the world is greatly in need of work done by intelligent citizens who do not want political offices. In a wider sense, you can do a great deal in this world today by thinking, by analyzing questions that come before your town or city and by helping to find an intelligent solution for them.

"As to your human relations, you must realize what a large part of life these are and how difficult they are to adjust to life, especially these times. I think it is better to take some years off, when possible, from business or a profession to start families."

Conceit and over-modesty are two pitfalls the graduates should avoid, she warned.

"Don't settle down as a useful assistant to some professional man or woman," she continued, "but aim at a position of the highest power. Whatever work you do, do it with distinction even if it's only washing dishes."

Lawrence's Death Saddens Britain

Churchill Says 'No Greater Blow Has Befallen The Empire For Years'

Wrapped in the Union Jack he served so well, the body of Colonel T. E. Lawrence was born on May 19 to the little slate-roofed mortuary adjoining the hospital at Bovington Camp in Dorset, where the organizer of the great "Revolt in the Desert" has died a few hours earlier.

Two orderlies, who had kept watch over him during his six days of unconsciousness, lifted his body from the ambulance in the pouring rain and carried it into the mortuary chapel. There it lay before the altar, on which a small crucifix stood, says Mr. Ferdin and Kuhn Jr., New York Times London correspondent, whose article on May 19 follows:

Funeral arrangements are as simple as anything "Lawrence of Arabia" could have wished. The funeral will be held privately on Tuesday in the village church at Moreton, near the tiny cottage where Colonel Lawrence lived, and at the request of his brother, A. W. Lawrence, there will be no flowers and no mourning. Only his relatives and intimate friends will be invited, but there may also be a memorial service in London at which great figures of the empire can pay their last respects.

Injuries to Brain Revealed

His friends feel it was just as well in some ways that Colonel Lawrence did not recover. Injuries to his brain were so serious that he would have been partly blind and dumb for the rest of his life. After a post-mortem examination by Dr. Hugh W. B. Cairns, London brain specialist, the following statement was issued:

"The post mortem showed such severe lacerations and damage to the brain that in the event of his recovery he would have only regained the partial use of his speech and eyesight. In view of the immense activity and energy of T. E. Shaw, it is felt this may be of some consolation to those who had entertained anxious hopes for his recovery."

All the same, there was a nation-wide feeling tonight that it was a tragic waste to have lost a man of Colonel Lawrence's brilliance at his age of only 46 in an unwarranted and perhaps avoidable motorcycle accident. Through the flood of tributes which have poured in upon his brother and filled the columns of newspapers there was a feeling that Britain might have relied upon Colonel Lawrence again in some emergency still to come.

Winston Churchill expressed it when he said that no greater blow had befallen the British Empire for years.

"I had hoped to see him quit his retirement and take a commanding part in facing the dangers which now threaten the country," said Mr. Churchill. "In Lawrence we have lost one of the greatest beings of our time.

Might Have Been Most Useful

"What Lawrence's future work might have been nobody dared to say. But thousands, reading of his amazing career, felt certain he would have been even more useful to his country than when he went into the desert in 1916 to organize the Arab rebellion against the Turkish Empire."

It was learned tonight the Air Ministry was hoping to acquire Colonel Lawrence as an expert in designing airplane engines to be used in the process of aerial rearmament that is just beginning. For Colonel Lawrence was not only supreme as a tactician in land warfare, but he understood flying as no other military leader could, and he had uncanny mechanical skill.

Colonel Lawrence, who could have had everything, died a poor man. Whatever money he received from the sale of his books he gave to military charities, except for a small income which friends tonight estimated at about $1,000 a year. It was all he needed and all he wanted. "The more money a man has," he said once, "the more he wants, to pay his way."

At the time of his fatal accident he was working on translations in his tiny cottage. It is understood he left no new manuscript of any importance. His books and papers probably will be given to a museum for safekeeping instead of being sold.

His 73-year-old mother still does not know her famous son is dead. She is sailing down the Yangtze River with another son and will not receive the tragic news until she reaches Shanghai.

Colonel Lawrence's death early this morning came after an amazing struggle for life after he was critically injured last Monday when he was hurled from his motor-cycle on which he was traveling at breakneck speed through the peaceful Dorset countryside, swerving to avoid a boy cyclist.

For almost six days since the accident the 46-year-old steel-nerved leader of the Arab revolt in the World War had lain unconscious in the little military hospital at Bovington Camp, his life hanging by a thread. Noted specialists and a group of special nurses had done all that their skill could do for him, but from the first the odds were against him.

The physicians resorted to artificial feeding in an effort to maintain his strength, but the prolonged unconsciousness gradually sapped it. A close watch had been kept on him in the event that he might regain consciousness.

At 1 o'clock this morning Sir Farquhar Buzzard, the King's physician, arrived at his bedside after having driven from Oxford. He was immediately joined by other physicians, including Dr. H. W. B. Cairns, brain specialist, who made a dramatic dash, motoring the 100 miles from Arundel upon receiving an urgent call and reaching the hospital at 12:20 a.m.

Dr. A. Hope Gosse, London lung specialist, arrived at the hospital at 2:20 a.m. by auto and immediately went into consultation with Captain C. P. Allen, the hospital surgeon, and the specialist, Colonel Lawrence's relatives, summoned last night, were still maintaining an anxious vigil.

At 3 A. M. it was reported that there had been some failure of Colonel Lawrence's heart action.

"The outlook becomes much less favorable as a consequence of progressive congestion of one lung," the bulletin added.

Colonel Lawrence suddenly took a turn for the worse last night and relatives and close friends were hastily summoned.

The first indication of the extreme gravity of the patient's condition came at 6:45 P. M. when Captain Allen, who had been fighting throughout the week to save his life, told newspapermen he had bad news for them.

"The condition of T. E. Shaw (the name Colonel Lawrence assumed when he entered the Royal Air Force as a private after his Arabian adventures) has taken a sudden change. Condition is now very grave," he said.

Shortly before 6 o'clock a motor cycle driven by Pat Knowles, Colonel Lawrence's orderly and close friend, with the colonel's brother, A. W. Lawrence, on the pillion seat, dashed up to the hospital. The colonel's brother and his wife arranged to remain at the hospital throughout the night.

75 Years A Postmaster

Roswell Beardsley of North Lansing, N.Y., who holds the record for any person in any office, was born in 1809. On June 28, 1828, he was appointed Postmaster by President John Quincy Adams, at an annual salary of $19.53, which was periodically increased. In this office Mr. Beardsley served continuously until his death on January 6, 1903. He served under the administration of 20 United States Presidents, a total of almost 75 years, and was active and efficient to the last.

A Paradoxical Sailor

A. C. Taylor, now in the Naval Service in Bremerton, Wash., enlisted in the Navy in St. Louis, Sept. 10, 1920, and served continuously until January 1934—13 years and 4 months—before he ever saw a battleship. His first assignment was at Great Lakes, Ill. Then he went to USNH in Las Animas, Colo., thence to Haiti, and Washington, back to Great Lakes, whence he went to the Philippines. Never once, however, did he come within sight of a battleship until he landed at the Navy Yard in Bremerton.

Social and Personal Notes

MR. BROWN ENTERTAINS

The American Club was the scene of a gay and pretty luncheon Wednesday noon when Mrs. Irving B. Brown entertained about 30 guests. Among those present was Mrs. M. I. Samuels, near relative of Mrs. Lester White, who arrived in Yokohama early Wednesday on the Empress of Russia and who had only a few hours in Japan on her way to China. She rejoined the steamer immediately after the luncheon.

The luncheon table was decorated with three large bowls of pink heather, yellow scabiosa, lavender baby chrysanthemums, and white tube roses and these blossoms were also combined in individual corsages for the guests.

The guests were Mrs. John Reifsnider, Mrs. Ray G. Marshall, Mrs. Glenn Babb, Mrs. R. M. Corbin, Mrs. M. W. Pettigrew, Miss Tony Wong, Mrs. G. M. Coe, Mrs. R. M. Andrews Jr., Mrs. I. O. Musgjerd, Mrs. Helbling, Mrs. D. M. Forsyth, Mrs. Merritt Booth, Mrs. W. W. Glass, Mrs. James R. Young, Mrs. Lee Dance, Mrs. D. D. MacGregor, Mrs. David Tait, Mrs. Elon Olney, Mrs. L. E. Butler, Mrs. William G. Hillen, Mrs. Edwin L. Neville, Mrs. John Curtis, Mrs. Lester White, Mrs. Hedley, Mrs. Hanley, and Mrs. M. I. Samuels.

DINNER PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Robinson entertained at dinner on Wednesday evening in honor of Count Waldmer, the Spanish magician now in Tokyo who entertained the guests with examples of his mysterious art. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. E. de Silva, Mr. A. de Silva of Hongkong, Mr. William Herzel of Kobe, Miss Autumn Marshall of Yokohama, Mr. Sayler of Hollywood, Mrs. William Lawson, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Esselstyn of Detroit and Mr. Esselstyn Jr.

SAILED TODAY

Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. Thomas and family sailed this afternoon on the Chichibu Maru for the United States. They will spend the summer and fall in the eastern states and they expect to return in November.

ART AUTHORITY ARRIVES

Monsieur Paul Pelliot, well known authority on China, and Madame Pelliot arrived in Tokyo Wednesday from Shanghai. They will be guests at the Maison Franco-Japonaise, Kanda, for about two weeks.

Monsieur Pelliot has visited China many times but on this trip he was commissioned by the British Government to collect art objects in China for the exhibition of Oriental Art to be held in London soon. His special interest included archaelogical documents. While in Tokyo, Monsieur Pelliot will inspect several libraries and study classic Chinese books found here. When they leave Tokyo, Monsieur and Madame Pelliot will go to London.

TO TEACH JUJITSU

Mr. Yasuyuki Kumagai, 28, a teacher of jujitsu in the Aoyama Normal school, will sail June 28 on the N.Y.K. liner Helan Maru to teach jujitsu in the University of Washington. He will also enroll in that institution as a student. He will sail from Yokohama.

HAS HOUSE GUEST

Mrs. I. O. Musgjerd has as her house guest her sister, Mrs. J. V. Starret of Kobe.

CLASS BANQUET

The senior class of the American School in Japan will be guests at a banquet given by the P.T.A. at the school auditorium Friday evening. About 60 friends of the school are expected to attend.

AT KARUIZAWA HOME

Mr. F. Havlicek, the Minister from Czechoslovakia, has moved to his summer home in Karuizawa.

"MR. AND MRS. JAPAN" ARE CREATED

To extend a hearty welcome to Japan at Yokohama when the Asama Maru of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha arrives with Mr. and Mrs. America, doll envoys on board, Mr. and Mrs. Japan have been created by the hands of Mr. Toyotaso Takiawa, a doll maker living near Kaminarimon, Asakusa Ward.

The male doll representative will put on haori and hakama while Mrs. Japan will be dressed in gorgeous kimono.

It is said that Mr. and Mrs. America are occupying a room on the "C" deck, of the Asama Maru. The room is accommodated with all modern luxuries and contains a parlor, a bed room, and a maid room.

MINISTER ENTERTAINS

The Norwegian Minister, Mr. Aubert, entertained at dinner Wednesday evening. His guests were the Danish Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Hergel; the Swedish Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Bagge; the British Counsellor and Mrs. Charles Dodd, the British Naval Attache and Mrs. J. G. P. "Love Time"

Still another Schubert film is released this week at the Hibiya Gekijo by the Fox Film Company, "Love Time." This picture continues until June 20. "Love Time" is the kind of a love story the whole world loves. It features the English beauty, "Pat" Paterson, and Nils Asther as the principals of its romantic story, deals with the youth of the world-famed composer, Franz Schubert, and the first great love of his life.

Set in Austria in the early years of the nineteenth century, "Love Time" follows Schubert from his remote village home to the court of the Emperor at Vienna. And with him goes the lovely Valerie ("Pat" Paterson), who, history relates, was the daughter of a nobleman high in the councils of the Emperor, though she was reared as a village maid.

Many of Schubert's immortal compositions, among them the famous "Serenade," "Moment Musical," "Impatience" and the delightful "Who Is Sylvia?", are woven into the story of "Love Time," pointing and enhancing its moods and moments. The musical climax of the picture is achieved when Schubert appears before the Emperor and his court and directs a huge orchestra in a rendition of his own music.

"Richest Girl in the World"

Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea are the stars of "Richest Girl in the World," an RKO-Radio picture, now running at the Hibiya Gekijo.

Miss Hopkins makes an excellent portrayal of a girl who is left with millions and revolts against fortune hunters. She causes her secretary to pose as herself and there are in consequence many amusing situations, but love conquers in the end. Fay Wray playing opposite to Miss Hopkins is a success, and the two types of femininity are a good contrast.

"Devil Dogs of the Air"

The featured play now at the Nippon Gekijo, continuing until June 20, is "Devil Dogs of the Air," a Cosmopolitan production released by Warner Brothers.

The scenes were taken for the most part at the U. S. Naval base at San Diego, Calif., and at the flying field on North Island. It was produced under special arrangements with the U. S. Government and marine officers acted as technical advisers.

Special marine maneuvers were conducted for the picture in which a score of warships, dozens of airplanes and teh giant U.S.S. Macon took part.

Spectacular air stunts, with planes crashing in mid-air, bursting into flame and spinning to the ground, while pilots leap for their lives in parachutes, are some of the many thrills in the picture.

Schuman Concert Given By Tokyo Music Society

Spanisches Liederspiel Presented; Miss Inouye Plays Piano Solo

By JOHN GOSS

A concert of the works of Robert Schumann, the first of the minor composers, does not require an excuse for its announcement even as unconvincing as a 125th anniversary, for it was quite obvious to the audience at the concert given under the auspices of the Tokyo Music Society at the Nihonseinenkan on Tuesday evening that Schumann has, within his limits, enough variety of musical thought to sustain a whole program without running the risk of monotony.

The arrangers of Tuesday's program had further minimized this risk by presenting the composer to us in three distinct moods: first, in the discreet exploitation of Spanish idioms suggested by Geibel's folk-song translations; second, the Carnival, a Teutonized "Commedia del Arte"; and finally, in his musical reactions to the bitter-sweet humors and despairs of Heine's "Lyrisches Intermezzo."

Spanisches Liederspiel

The Spanisches Liederspiel, a cycle of vocal solos, duets and quartets, was very attractively presented by Miss Hiroko Iwaya, Mrs. Fumicko Yotsuya Mr. Yozi Otaguro and Mr Tamaki Tokuyama. A song from a later opus of Schumann was added to enable us to hear Mrs Yotsuya's easy warm mezzo-contralto alone, and instead of the extremely difficult 'Der contradandiste" Mr. Tokuyama substituted "Der Hidalgo".

In this he seemed to be holding himself in unnecessarily, as if Hidalgo and Samurai expressed interchangeable ideas, but in the ensembles he gave a more spirited account of himself.

Mr. Otagura combined sincere conviction with considerable dramatic force is his "Geständnis" solo. In the duets for similar voices the effect was always pleasing; it was only when mixed voices came into play that certain disparities of voice production were evident. The somewhat restricted intensity of the men's singing did not always balance the free and unruffled utterance of the women. Particularly was this noticeable in the "Alle gingen, Herz zu Ruh" in which Schumann, in one of his loveliest songs, makes much use of canonical device.

Miss Iwaya Pleasing

Miss Iwaya's appealing voice and manner gave unalloyed pleasure. Her beautiful sense of phrasing supplied, as it were, the key-stone of the vocal arch in the various part-songs, but she would probably be the first to admit that her performance of "Melancholie" will be still more convincing when her voice has attained greater strength and maturity. The whole work was attacked with confidence and enthusiasm; none of the finer points were missed, and Mr. Paul Rosenstand's sound musicianship at the piano contributed not a little to the general success.

That talented young pianist, Miss Sonoko Inouye, played on this occasion Schumann's youthful "Carnival". Her technique is at times amazing, and she has an entrancing touch in the more sentimental items, but at least to one listener she seemed to handle the work much too seriously. After all it is a comedy—an album of deft observations and quick-fingered character sketches made under the silhouetting lights of holiday time in a French city. Its humors are never subtle nor its sorrows profound, and the player should approach it from outside with a whimsical if understanding smile. The work is too frail to stand the weight of earnest, inner interpretation that Miss Inouye asked it to bear.

Mrs. Netke-Loewe's

The evening was brought to a close by Mrs. Margarete Netke-Loewe's finely wrought performance of the "Dichterliebe." This setting by Schumann of a handful of lyrics from Heine's larger work portrays the composer at his best and worst. The cycle will no doubt long remain popular with singers because of its appropriate length and the chance it gives for diversity of vocal expression, but herein the musician rarely matches up to the poet, for Heine even in his most tearful moods has a mordancy, a corrosive acidity which was far beyond Schumann's range. It is odd too that Schumann, the most literary of composers, should have committed such imaginative blunders as he sometimes does in this work.

For example, in the sixth number, in which the whole dramatic focus of the poem is on the likeness of the beloved to the face of the Virgin, Schumann takes his cue from the opening lines and sets out to give a pianistic description of the Rhine Provinces with notes on the architectural glories of its chief city. However, it is possible to overlook this solecism and the quite appalling musical gaucherie of the song about the "alten Marchen" in view of the half dozen vocal gems that are included in this cycle.

But Schumann's sins of omission and commission apart, nothing but the highest praise can be given to Mrs. Netke-Loewe for her deeply felt interpretation of the cycle in question. The work was finely comprehended from the first note to the last: her sense of tone-color and word-stress made her performance a completely satisfying experience. Viscount Konoye's undertaking of the pianoforte accompaniment was not so impressive; he seemed on this occasion to be registering a lower blood pressure than the singer.

The concert was preceded by a speech on Robert Schumann by Mr. Koh Iba which was listened to with rapt attention by a sympathetic and representatives audience.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Builder of His Fate

General Walrave (1691-1773) noted Prussian fortification builder, constructed the fortresses of Stettin, Wesel, Kehl, Mainz and Magdeburg in Prussia. Leading a very extravagant life, he became suspect to Frederick the Great, when he sought to approach the Saxon and Russian Ambassadors. Frederick feared that Walrave might be bribed into betraying the secrets of the Prussian fortresses to the King's enemies. At the King's order, the General was seized without a trial, and incarcerated in a dungeon of the Magdeburg fortress, which he had built himself. Here he spent 25 years in solitary confinement, which ended with his death. He was the first prisoner confined in the dungeon of his own construction.

French Govt. Testing Plane Without Wings

Machine Propelled By Suction; Does Not Need Motor

A new flying machine without wings, motor, propeller or rotors, yet capable of doing all the things that a normal airplane or autogiro can do, is being secretly tested by the French Government, it was learned recently. The machine is the invention of the Belgian war veteran aviator, Paul Dupuys de Rolleghem, who three years ago was seriously injured in marking his first test flight in the first model of his new device.

At present two models are being experimented with by the French Government at the government testing field at Issy-le-Moulineaux, according to Herbert L. Matthews in the New York Times. One is a two-seater with a total flying weight of 900 pounds, of which 600 is the load capacity. It is claimed it has a vertical speed of 1,500 feet a minute and a cruising speed of 120 miles an hour.

The machine has no motor in the accepted sense of the word. Instead, it has a series of burners, using either crude oil or gasoline, which develop a heat of 1,200 degrees centigrade. (2,192 degrees Fahrenheit.) Hot air is forced out of these burners at a fifty-pound pressure.

This hot air passes over a series of tiny four-inch wing-shaped "planes" in concentric circles. There are fifteen of these places in front of the pilot's cockpit and one behind. The action of the hot air produces exactly the same aerodynamic effect through suction as air reaction on plane surfaces of a normal airplane. To get horizontal speed another series of wings is set in the nose of the ship, where the propeller of a normal airplane would be. Suction created there pulls the machine forward.

The whole affair looks like nothing so much as a large wooden shoe of a peasant, except that it is made entirely of duralumin. The second model is larger and has not yet been tested so exhaustively as the smaller machine, but government officials are hopeful that it will be as successful as the smaller one.

The chief weakness is the intense heat developed by the burners, which, it is feared, might melt some of the important parts of the machine's apparatus. The inventor, however, has composed a special fireproof liquid which gives the necessary resistance, though in its present form it is soluble in water and experimentation is still continuing.

M. de Rolleghem has been ordered by the government to refrain from further private experiments with his planes and cooperate with official engineers in perfecting the machine.

Sinclair Opposes Third Party

Upton Sinclair has no inclination to follow a third party. Preparing for the State-wide EPIC convention was held in Los Angeles recently the founder of the movement explained that as a losing candidate for Governor last Fall he "ran as a Democrat and I still am a Democrat. A policy already has been established by the EPIC forces to definitely oppose any Huey Long 'share the wealth' program," he said.

British Air Force To Be Trebled In Two Years

mental domestic and economic problems, and an appeal to the Labor Party to believe that if they had been the Government they could not have acted differently. This appeal was accompanied by an applauded compliment to the Opposition for the way in which, though reduced to a handful, they had helped to keep in being a free Parliament and to keep respected Parliamentary institutions. Mr. Baldwin's speech ended amid general and heartfelt cheers.

Mr. Attlee, however, was uncomfortably unable to respond fully to the appeal. He agreed that Herr Hitler's speech was hopeful in parts, he asked that the Disarmament Conference should be summoned to follow it up, and he stood for a free Parliament and for proper national defence. But he raked up opposition to this kind of defence on the ground that the past handling of foreign affairs had been deplorable and that stronger armaments were not necesary for us to play our part in collective security. A pooling of forces through the League was the only true answer to the admitted menace of a powerful and suspected non-League Power. Moreover, the Government's plans left civil aviation out of account, they neglected those economic reforms which were the sure basis of peace, and they ensured no proper cooperation between the terribly expensive Defence Forces. He therefore moved a reduction of the Vote under discussion.

Liberal Support

For the Opposition Liberals, Sir Archibald Sinclair emphasized equally the danger from Germany and the grievances of Germany. One of the latter was economic troubles caused by the breakdown of the World Economic Conference, for which the British insistence on an Imperial economic policy was responsible. Honor having been satisfied by dragging in this fiscal King Charles' head, Sir Archibald Sinclair decided to support the Government, because our reequipment did appear to be a contribution to collective security.

Mr. Churchill's Fears

Mr. Churchill declared that he would prefer deeds to Herr Hitler's words, and that he thought the testing time would come when Germany's economic difficulties would multiply owing to her inability to buy raw materials to keep her armaments industry going. He repeated his fears of Germany's air superiority, and his surprise that this country, so long secure behind its Navy, could not realize its new danger. The Government were belatedly making a considerable effort, but he could not understand their earlier mistakes, and hinted that some departmental channel had diverted waters of information which would otherwise have reached Mr. Baldwin. He suggested that the forthcoming estimate might be discussed in secret session, so that technical points might safely be raised.

Captain Guest supported this view with a plea for the simultaneous development of civil aviation on a large scale. Dr. Addison strongly criticized the alleged lack of coordination in defence, and Sir Roger Keyes pointed out that the Navy could not be neglected any more than the Air Force.

Sir Stafford Cripps then made an effort to explain the Labor Party's case. We could, he said, rely on the air forces of other countries, if collective security was a reality, and therefore, if the joint air forces were compared with the force of a potential aggressor we had no need to have an expanded Air Force of our own. Expansion could be no defence, since there was no defence against air attack, and the Opposition was not going to sign a blank cheque to achieve a futile parity. The moment to increase the Air Force had been chosen just when, according to the Government themselves, Herr Hitler had either made a sincere offer or put up a bluff which could be called.

71 New Squadrons

Sir Philip Sassoon effectively retorted that the pursuit of collective security by unilateral disarmament had utterly failed. Turning to the new program, he explained that the 1,500 first-line machines would have full reserves behind them, and would be in addition to aircraft on stations oversea and to the Fleet Air Arm. The addition would amount to 71 new squadrons. The increased requirements of personnel would involve retirements at a later age and many more recruiting depots.

It was not in the public interest to reveal how many engines would be ordered, but the demand, though heavy, could be met, and plans for the expansion of the industry in case of graver emergency were being made. He repeated emphatically that profiteering would be prevented; but for the moment no Government factories would be set up. Five new training schools would be started, and civilian schools would also be used. Thirty-one new stations, making 49 in all, would be required. He could not say how much the cost would be, but the estimate would be brought in this Session.

He gave an encouraging account of technical developments, which had produced types of machines definitely superior to foreign types. Finally, he denied that the state of civil flying was unsatisfactory. He hoped that the Government could count on general support for their policy, and the cheers with which this hope was greeted were an eloquent answer. The Opposition nevertheless insisted on dividing, but were defeated by 340 votes to 52.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Service Record of 13's

Had Albert W. Newton of Jackson, Georgia, known in advance the number of times "13" would appear in his service record during the Great War, he might have been more dubious. He was the 13th man in a call of 13 men from Butts County, going to the 13th Company at Camp Greenleaf. He sailed from New York in a convoy of 13 ships which met an escort-convoy of 13 British ships. They were 13 days crossing, landing at Liverpool on Sept. 13th, and after 13 months in the army, Newton arrived home on June 13th, 1919—safe and sound.

The Eternal Triangle

The mathematician's favorite example of "Infinity" is the angular inexhaustibility of the Triangle, including both the plane and spherical variety. When it is realized that every triangle has at least 6 elements, (3 sides and 3 angles) while the 3 sides of the spherical triangle are angular as well as linear magnitudes, and that angles are expressed in degrees, minutes, seconds, and second-decimals, it will be clear why "all the population of the earth, working at nothing else since Creation, could never have exhausted all the possible triangles, nor indeed could they have measured every possible angle in that figure."

Common Language Held Key To Peace

D. H. Morris, Envoy To Belgium, Hopes All Schools In World Will Soon Teach One

The problems inherent in the present multi-lingual situation and the obstacles which languages have placed in the path of world peace and cooperation were discussed in a symposium recently which was combined with a reception for Dave H. Morris, Ambassador to Belgium, and Mrs. Morris at the home of Mrs. John Henry Hammond, 9 East Ninety-first Street, New York City.

Comprising the annual meeting of the International Auxiliary Language Association, the reception was preceded by a meeting of the board of directors, at which the following were elected to serve until 1940: Mrs. Morris, who was one of the founders and is also honorary secretary of the association; Dr. Stephan P. Duggan and Dr. Paul Monroe.

Dr. John H. Finley, re-elected vice president of the association, was the first of the speakers introduced by Mrs. Hammond, says the New York Times. His message was one of welcome to the 200 guests.

Language Barriers Scored

Helen S. Eaton, linguistic research associate of the association, read a paper prepared by Dr. Duggan setting forth the objectives of the association. The premise of these Dr Duggan described as being that "the international mind, in which we are so vitally interested, is as yet inarticulate."

"Our several international procedures are at once inefficient, unimaginative and uneconomic, simply because of these intolerable language barriers. The I. A. L. A. is interested in employing scientific ways and means to obtain an auxiliary international language. We are not as yet advocating any particular one of the present so-called universal languages, such as Esperanto; we are, rather devoted to linguistic research on that problem."

Ambassador Morris expressed his warm enthusiasm for the work of the association and for the projected research with which Mrs. Morris has been closely identified for the last twelve years.

Diplomatic Handicaps Told

"In the diplomatic world," he said, "I can assure you from many personal experiences in Washington, London, Paris and Brussels that, no matter how fluently the diplomat speaks a foreign language, he is always at a disadvantage, and again and again, from this inexorable law of psychology, situations result which range from the ridiculous to the serious.

He stressed the growing need for an auxiliary language, which he said he was sure would one day be compulsory primary education, and said the time had come when there was actually no alternative. He added:

"Is it not a humiliation that in this modern age there is not yet taught in the schools throughout the world one and the same language that is secondary to each national tongue, in conflict with none, and that will be a means of direct communication between all people of different tongues?"

Thomas J. Watson, president of the International Business Machines Corporation, said an international language and international education were inevitable essentials. "Without them," he continued, "we shall never solve the four great problems of tariffs, currencies, debts settlements and reduction of armaments.

Other speakers included Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers; Dr. Herbert N. Shenton, Mrs. Morris and Mrs. Yorke Allen.

Per Capita Public Debt In U.S. Third Of Britain's

Placing England's public debt at $736 per capita, J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, in the U.S. Govt. said recently that the Amercian public debt was only one-third of that, despite heavy public expenditures.

"In some quarters fear has been expressed because of rather large expenditures of the Federal government," said Mr. O'Connor in his address.

"Let us compare the public debt of England, France and Italy with that of the United States. The public debt of England is $33,904,080,000, or $736.37 per capita; in France it is $21,108,846,000, of $503,78 per cepita, and in Italy, $8,778,229,000, or $205.84 per capita. The United States has a public debt of $28,478,664,000, or $224.60 per cent capita, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. O'Connor said that as a result of refunding operations, interest payments on the public debt today amount to $801,000,000 annually, while in 1925, with an indebtedness of $20,000,000,000, interest paid amounted to $829,000,000.

Father Coughlin Cheered By Big New York Crowd

ate cash payment of the adjusted service certificates.

"The main point made by the President was that the immediate payment of the certificates would place the veterans in a favored class. He intimated that the veterans were not asking for a special privilege. He seemed to overlook the fact that Congress in 1924 passed the adjusted compensation act to give the veterans at least a small share of the wages they lost by reason of joining the colors and donning the uniform of their country. That act was a recognition of the fact that it was unfair to pay the veterans a dollar a day when even common laborers received at least ten times that amount.

"It was not a bonus and I may say that the veterans never asked for a bonus. The idea of adjusting their compensation originated in the Congress itself. Therefore, it is a little difficult to understand why the President should have stressed the fact that benefit payments have been made and are being made to the veterans of the World War and their dependents, and not to civilian workers who helped to win that war."

At the close of his address Mr. Van Zandt aroused the crowd to howling enthusiasm when he declared that the veterans were 'standing on the threshould of success" and urged his hearers to telephone or telegraph their Senators to vote for the immediate cash payment of the bonus.

Three Representatives who voted to override the bonus veto were introduced by Mr. Ward amid cheers as they took seats on the platform. The fourth Representative of the group he had alluded to was not present. The three who came as Father Coughlin prepared to talk were Theodore L. Moritz of Pittsburgh, Martin L. Sweeney of Ohio and William H. Connery of Massachusetts.

As Mr. Ward voiced the hope that Senator Wagner would vote tomorrow to override the bonus veto, Senator Wagner's name was greeted with a rising chorus of boos.

Italy's Finest Art On Exhibit In Paris

President Lebrun Opens Showing Of Greatest Masters Of Seven Centuries

One of the greatest exhibitions of Italian art ever seen was officially opened in Paris on May 16 by President Albert Lebrun in the presence of Count Galeazzo Ciano, Premier Mussolini's son-in-law, and the podestas of Rome, Naples and other large Italian cities that have contributed works. An impressive gathering of French officials and foreign diplomats attended.

The exhibition is divided into two parts. The first, covering from the thirteenth to the seventeenth century, inclusive, is at the Petit Palais. The second, covering the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, is at the Jeu de Paume Museum. Italy herself has never gathered in a single exposition such a widely representative group of her great masters, which normally are scattered not only among many Italian museums, but throughout the world, according to the New York Times.

This spectacle, which visitors may view for two and one-half months, is the fruit of several years of patient, persistent planning, to which Premier Mussolini added the necessary good-will. He gave not only his consent but his enthusiastic aid, even choosing many of the masterpieces and waiving all questions of cost, insurance and possible damage. However, the risks inherent in transferring these priceless works make it unlikely that Italy will ever again permit loans on such a great scale.

The paintings commence with the primitives, including the works of Cimabue, Duccio and Diotto. Then they sweep on into the fifteenth century, culminating in a room largely devoted to Bottocelli and his followers. Botticelli's "Birth of Venus" occupies a place of honor in this room, and in view of its fame will doubtless attract as great attention as any picture in the exhibition.

The visitor then enters the salon d'honneur, where he finds about twenty paintings that might well serve as examples of the greatest works of the Italian Renaissance. The Louvre lent Leonardo da Vinci's "Annunciation" and "The Virgin of the Rocks" and several Correggios. Among other pictures there are Michelangelo's "Holy Family," Giorgione's "Concert," Titian's "Venus of Urbino," Tintoretto's "Susanna and the Elders" and several Raphaels.

The Hermitage, Vatican and Dresden Museums and private American and Britain collectors also have sent works.

Other rooms carry the visitor into the baroque and Morocco periods. There are statues by Donatello, Verrochio and Michelangelo and several polychrome statues from churches. The della Robbia family is well represented.

One entire section of the museum is devoted to drakings.

At the Jeu de Paume Museum, the works begin with Casanova statues and takes the visitor to moderistic painters like Modigliani, Spadini, de Chirico, de Pisis and Carena.

The enthusiasm of art critics and the public already is great. It is believed the exhibition will be the outstanding attraction of the Paris season.

Canadians Not Indians, They Want US To Know

An education campaign in the United States to convince Americans that Canadians are not Indians or Eskimos was seriously urged in the Canadian Parliament at Ottawa during the discussion of a $200,000 vote for Canada's new national Tourist Bureau, according to the New York Times. It was also suggested that more light be thrown on the nature of Canada's climate to obviate the annual spectacle of American tourists arriving in the full heat of Summer with sleds and skis lashed to their automobiles.

Declaring that better results had been obtained from newspaper advertising than the radio, Dr. Manion, Minister of Railways, announced that 85 per cent of the sum voted would be spent in United States newspapers.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Road To Ruin

The Mamore-Madeira Railway, about 200 miles long, is situated in the Territory of Acre, which formerly belonged to Bolivia. When it was awarded to Brazil in 1903, the latter country undertook to build a railroad across the seething jungle, to allow Bolivia an outlet to the Atlantic. Several companies went bankrupt trying to build it, until an American financier of York, Pa. took over the job on a cost plus basis.

The first five miles of rail were laid at a cost of 10,000 lives, literally requiring a life for each crosstie laid. In their progress throught the jungle, fever, heat, beri, beri, quicksands and poisonous insects continued to decimate the crew of laborers. The loss of life was so great, that 90 per cent of the lumber was imported from Formosa, half ways around the world, although virgin forests were at the right of way. The largest order of quinine ever placed, 25 tons at a clip, was quickly used in this undertaking. The exact number of victims is unknown, but it is safe to assume that it justifies the reputation of having "each cross tie resting upon a human skull."

"Do Away With Excess Weight"

In exactly one year, Lawrence Mack of Detroit reduced his weight 123 pounds without dieting or exercising.

On April 14, 1933, Mack was so heavy he couldn't sleep in an ordinary bed, couldn't dress himself, and had great difficulty in walking. His weight was 328 pounds, and doctors gave up hope for him if he grew heavier. Then he spent some time studying every medical book he could find dealing with overweight and obesity, he experimented with harmless mineral combinations, and before long had a combination that produced real results. On April 14, 1934, Mack's doctors weighed him again. To their astonishment he tipped the scales at 205—123 pounds lighter than a year before.

A NEW NOVEL
"Pilot And Shogun"
The Strange Story Of Will Adams (Miura Anjin), A Contemporary Of Shakespeare, Who Won The Confidence Of Tokugawa Iyeyasu
By JAMES A. B. SCHERER
Author of "Japan's Advance", "The Romance of Japan", etc.

The Ship in Which Will Adams reached Japan in 1600
Dr. Scherer's presentation of "Miura Anjin" as a Japanese samurai is thrilling, and his portraiture of that bygone time has the ring of truth. His romance is real history, and I find it far superior to any historical novel of recent years. For he knows the Old Japan at first hand, and has absorbed its atmosphere. He is as much at home on the straw-mats of Nihon as in the Mermaid Tavern: and he transports his reader with him.'—Dr. Thomas Baty in The Japan Times.

and started dribbling down the field the throng shouted in expectancy. He and Willie Mills, the inside left, usually proceeded to pass their way right through the American team.

The first of Duncan's drives tied the score after eighteen minutes of the first half, not long after the Americans had tossed the crowd into a frenzy of excitement by punching through the first goal for their only tally of the day. His last two clinched the game in the final half.

The statistics show the manifest superiority of the visitors. They had thirty-three shots at the goal to eleven, made only six saves to nineteen and cleared eleven corners to three.

There was nothing in the nature of a fluke about the lone United States tally. Johnny Slavin booted a long one to Erno Schwarcz at the wing and Schwarcz immediately centred the ball for Johnny McEwan to send it through the goal mouth for a score.

In a preliminary game Greenock West of Scotland defeated the Hungarian Midgets, 3 to 1, in a semi-final of the Eastern division of the National Junior Cup play.

Mattress Sold For $3 Held $3,200 Savings

The Achison family of Hamilton, Ont., Canada almost lost their life savings of $3,200 recently.

The contents of the Achison home were sold at auction. Among the articles disposed of was an old mattress which went for $3, according to the New York Herald Tribune. In the mattress was stufied the total wealth of the family.

Remembering the hiding place of their money they rushed to the auction rooms, and after a frantic search, discovered the purchaser and recovered their money.

Blue-Eyed Monkey, An Albino, Caught

Unique Specimen Was Found In Colombia As A Baby And Reared There

The Central Park Zoo, of New York City received recently a white spider monkey, the only known one in the world, according to the New York Times.

Like the specially prized frog of the American Museum of History, it is an albino, which means it is an extremely rare freak of nature. More than that, it has blue eyes instead of the pink usually associated with albinos.

This unique zoological specimen arrived in New York on the United Fruit liner Calamares. It was part of a collection of South American fauna brought for presentation to the Park Department by Mr. and Mrs. Louis Kasin, says the New York Times whose article follows:

Mr. Kasin, a dealer in skins, bagged the animals during a fourmonth sojourn in the interior olwlands of Colombia. All except the monkey, which was captured two and a half years ago when it was a baby. No one in Colombia gave credence to the "find" until he went out with a native and succeeded in capturing it.

Came North in a Stateroom

The monkey, a female who goes by the name Pacha, was brought up as a pet by the Kasins during their sojourns in Colombia. On the trip north it shared a stateroom with them and their police puppy, Svisa.

"Look, she has fingernails like a young girl," Mr. Kasin said. "She is very tame. They are great friends, she and Svisa. The dog took her for a walk around the deck very day and won't let anybody bother her.

"Somebody offered me $2,000 for her, but I woudn't have sold her for $100,000. She is without price. There is nothing like her in the world."

Captain Ronald Cheyne-Stout, consulting zoologist of the Park Department, agreed that she was a very valuable find.

"And, Captain," interposed Mrs. Kasin, "be sure that she gets coffee every morning. Two cups of black coffee for breakfast, just like a person. She also likes French toast and jam, oranges and milk."

Pacha appeared completely bewildered by all the noise and commotion about her and likewise uncomfortable in the comparatively chill northern air. Shivering and sneezing, she kept peering uncertainly about her and ever and anon would swing up on a deckhouse or windlass.

Intrigued by Auto Steering

Mr. Kasin insisted that she be taken to the zoo in Captain Stout's automobile instead of on the truck which transported the caged specimens. Several times she tried to assist the captain in steering the car, but the trip was completed without mishap.

At the zoo she was placed in a cage with two other spider monkeys, a gray and a black one known as Pen and Ink respectively. Ink, a female, accepted the new arrival with unconcern, but Pen was considerably put out and swung down from a high perch every few minutes to make a pass at her. Pacha sat crouched on a low stand, her long spidery legs hunched up under her long supple arms clasped around her body. She did not look very happy and made no effort to fight back.

Another rare specimen presented to the Central Park Zoo was a king vulture, a large bird with an orange head, a white back and breast and black tail feathes.

There also were two capybaras for the Prospect Park Zoo. Members of the rodent family, they look like a large guinea pig with coarse brown hair. One of them broke out of its box about 8 p.m. last Monday night and created a considerable amount of excitement among the passengers before Mr. Kasin succeeded in roping it.

Other specimens landed by the Kasins were two iguanas and a black lizard for the Staten Island Zoo and three spoonbills, one saddle bill stork, one blue heron, one white heron, two gray herons and one grifa heron for Central Park. The birds, most of them, probably will be placed in the sanctuary at the Fifty-ninth Street Lake, Captain Cheyne-Stout said.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Main Entrance On The 6th Floor

Unlike any ordinary factory or office building, when you enter the factory of the Coldwell Lawn Mower Co. in Newburgh, N. Y., you come in on the 6th floor. The building is situated on the level of the Hudson River at a point where the land slopes abruptly down to the river, and the street level is even with the top floor, entrance being gained by a bridge over the railroad tracks between the building and the hillside. Thus both water and land shipping facilities are on the ground floor, the latter served by a private trucking roadway.

The Illustrious Lunatic

Auguste Comte (1798-1857), one of the profoundest thinkers and philosophers of the 19th century, was a man of extraordinary memory and intellect. He began with an ambitious plan of 62 lectures to be delivered at intervals for the benefit of the brightest men of France. Before he could deliver his second lecture, however, he became violently insane, and had to be confined in the Esquirol Insane Asylum. It was there that, in moments of lucidity, he "finished" the 6 volumes of "The Course of Positive Philosophy" which established a new school of Philosophy and will forever furnish wisdom to generations of scholars.

His manner of writing books was unique. He would think out a book from cover to cover down to the smallest detail and without the aid of references or written notes. When he had "thought out" his book, he considered it "finished." Then some time would elapse, and page after page of manuscript would go to the printer in a never ceasing stream, as though photographed from memory. He never made a correction. Yet "The Course," conceived in insanity and written from memory, is a model of accuracy and ranks with the grandest encyclopedias of the age.

Women Riot In Vera Cruz Over Price Of Corn Meal

A riotous demonstration staged by hundreds of women to protest increased prices of corn meal in Vera Cruz, Mexico, recently, brought energetic intervention by the police and threats to use Federal troops.

The women sought to force closing of the Nixtamal corn mill because, they charged, it increased prices of meal without warning. Police guarding the mills shouldered into the mob and dispersed it.

Labor leaders protested what they termed the "injury" done by the police. The inspector general, however, replied that he had orders to prevent disturbances.

Captain Fujita Ordered To Go To London

Captain Risaburo Fujita, a member of the Japanese delegation to General Disarmament Conference at Geneva, was on Saturday instructed to cross over to London.

His visit to London is watched with keen interest in view of the progress of Anglo-German naval talks.

U.S. Consul Is Praised Upon His Retirement

Nippon Dempo-United Press

WASHINGTON, June 14—President Roosevelt today approved the retirement of the American consul-general at Shanghai, Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, on December 31. Secretary of State Hull cabled Mr. Cunningham that his two and a half years' extra service had been most valuable, and "largely as a result of it, the situation which caused the extra demand upon you has improved and can now be entrusted to other hands."

Cardinal Warns Girls

The eleven girl graduates of Notre Dame College, Grymes Hill, Staten Island, N.Y., received their diplomas on May 28 from Cardinal Hayes at the school's commencement exercises.

Addressing the graduating class, Cardinal Hayes warned them against following the "modern woman," according to the New York Times. "You cannot afford to follow the modern woman," he declared. "We do not want you to be dummies, but we do want you to live up to the teachings of Christ."

An Outline of the Japanese Judiciary

Revised Second Edition

By JUDGE MASATARO MIYAKE

From the Preface

I have been asked frequently by English speaking people who wish to understand present day conditions in Japan if there is any work writen in English explaining the activities of the Japanese Judiciary. There are translations of the various codes; but there is no adequate literature to explain the administration of law. To supply this need until something more comprehensive is forthcoming, I have written these articles to show, mainly, by the use of statistics, the actual condition and working of the Japanese Judiciary. Those who care to examine the figures given in the text will find a good deal of information hidden therein.

An Authoritative Work in English which no Student of Japanese life and institutions may neglect. Here is described the whole judicial system of the nation with special attention paid to the penal system treatment of prisoners. Illustrated with photographs and many pertinent statistics.

Social and Personal Notes

One of the most delightful social events just before society leaves for summer homes was the garden party given Tuesday afternoon by the Mayor of Tokyo, Mr. Toratare Ushizuka, at the beautiful Kiyozumi park for members of the diplomatic corps. Around special tea rooms hung with light-colored Japanese lanterns, guests enjoyed typical Tokyo refreshments such as oshiruko, oden, sushi, yakitori, and cho-no-yu. The picture above shows one of the groups partaking of oshiruko. The man in the white suit is the German Ambassador, Dr. Herbert von Dirksen, and at his right are the host, Mayor Ushizuka, and General Tsiang Tso-ping, newly invested with the office of Chinese Ambassador to Japan.

The beauty of the park grounds, which were in perfect condition Tuesday, was enhanced by the attractive summer gowns and colorful kimono of the women guests who as they strolled about the gardens presented an effective picture.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

Lauded by their principal as a class known for its honesty, unselfishness and loyalty, seven young people were graduated from the American School in Japan Tuesday evening at the school auditorium.

They are Evelyn Down Margaret Walser, Margaret Moss, Elizabeth Jorgensen, Lawrence Durgin, Daniel Holtom Jr., and Kenneth Tsunoda.

It was the first commencement held in the new school building and the first under the principalship of Mr. Harold C. Amos who in presenting the class to Chairman R. F. Moss of the Board of Trustees, declared:

"I am proud of this class. It is a fine class—a loyal class—a sturdy, straightforward, honest class. It has worked unselfishly for the honor of the school, and it has been generous in its gifts. It has high ideals,—it has been an industrious class, it has never shirked responsibility or hard work.

"As this class leaves the halls of the American School in Japan never to return to us as a class, I can look after them and say: 'There goes a good class. They will work hard for everything that is best in life.' Mr. President, it is with pride that I present to you the Class of 1935."

Last words of advise to the graduating class were delivered by Mr. Moss just before he presented the diplomas. He stressed the quality of dependability, declaring it implied the virtues of courage, loyalty, faithfulness, independence, honor, morality, self-control, sincerity, and honesty. Mr. Moss also paid a tribute to the fine work of Mr. Amos during the last year.

A musical program was given by pupils of Miss Eloise Cunningham and two of the graduates, Elizabeth Jorgensen and Daniel Holtom, read prize winning essays.

Mr. Edwin C. Noville, counsellor at the American Embassy, gave the commencement address which follows in part:

"In recent years the public prints have been full of discussions about security. Nations seem to need it in great quantity, society in general seems to demand it, and the individual is to have it in his old age. This search for security is not a new phenomenon, except that at different times in the past, security was a thing of the soul or the mind. Just now it seems to have greatly to do with material welfare.

"To attain security the world is calling now, as it has in the past, for leaders. Let us this evening try to journey a little way with a few of the leaders of bygone times.

"Before setting forth on our journey, let us take counsel with some of the chroniclers and observers of yore who perhaps can set limits to our journey, or help us to pick our course. Our first and greatest adviser will be the Preacher, the son of David, king of Jerusalem. He sets out rather discouragingly by remarking that all is vanity; he also saw under the sun that the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong . . . nor yet favor to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all. Still, he also saw this wisdom under the sun, and it seemed great to him: 'There was a little city and few men within it; and then came a great king against it, and besieged it and built great bulwarks against it. Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.' So you see that we shall be unable to journey with that leader nor visit the little city he saved. Our journey will have to be with those whose names and works are recorded; those whose 'time and chance' have happened to catch man's imagination or a skilful recorder's attention."

The first of two examples of great leaders which the speaker cited was Plato, a philosopher and in many respects the greatest leader the political world has had although he was not a success either as a practical statesman or soldier. But he has influenced profoundly the political thought of the world.

"Plato found no place for his views and activities in active political life," the speaker continued "so he founded a school called the Academy from the place it was located. The Academy continued for nearly a thousand years. Plato and his pupils, among whom was Aristotle busied themselves with many branches of learning, but what we are concerned with was their effort to work out intellectually a political framework that would be proof against internal greed and dishonesty as well as against destruction by external attack. He came to the conclusion that a state would be safe if governed by the wise men who were personally disinterested in material gain, who were morally above temptation and who were mentally able to estimate the needs of the times. Plato had seen Athens invaded and its empire taken by a foe culturally far inferior, he had seen the mob destroy their old leaders and set up a form of government that in turn destroyed its wisest citizen, and he had seen the misery of the trading and artisan community who clamored for social security. So he built the state of his dreams. He there reestablished authority—authority absolute and unbreakable, that ruled by wisdom and controlled local petty interests in the light of the good of all.

"Still, Plato was not a recluse. He went west to Sicily and took as a pupil the heir to the ruler of Syracuse. He was then 60 years old. His pupil, Dyonisius, was a somewhat trying student, and wound up by seizing the government of the city. He came to a bad end, for he abused his position and was finally exiled and passed his last days in obscurity. Plato felt that there should be means of controlling the warring cities, and that there should be order and authority in the relations of communities, or as we should say today, in international relations. He envisaged an end to usurpers and city tyrants and wars."

Mr. Neville traced the lives and contributions of other great men, including Marcus Aurelius and George Washington and in conclusion declared:

"And now, what does all this mean to us? Are these men but images out of the past? No, they are men who influenced forever the world of their own time, which is part of the world we live in now. The thinker of the ancient world who turned men's minds towards civic peace and order, the ruler of a wide flung Empire which gave law and government to man, the leader and builder of a new nation—their thoughts and deeds are with us today. They found security and peace within themselves and imparted it to the world around them by doing and doing well the work they had before them. It probably will not fall to the lot of any of us to mould the thought of man, to rule Empires or create new nations. We can, however, do well the tasks that lie before us, earn the respect and confidence of those we live among, and not bewail 'the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,' for 'The fault dear Brutus, lies not in our stars, but in ourselves that we are underlings.' The Preacher perhaps would find that wisdom too. Let us try to find our security in meeting our fortune face to face, for it will overtake us if we try to run away."

FAREWELL DINNER

A farewell dinner in honor of Lt.-General Toyama, Commander of the Japanese detachment to Manchuria, who will leave Japan shortly, was held at the War Minister's official residence at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday under the auspices of the War Minister, the Inspector General of Military Education and the Chief of the General Staff.

The party was attended by H.I.H. Prince Kan-in, Chief of the General Staff, War Minister Hayashi, Generals Hishikari, Watanabe, Abe, Araki and Kawashima, Lt. General Sugiyama, Vice-Chief of the General Staff, Vice-War Minister Hashimoto, and other military leaders.

Galsworthy Memorial Is Unveiled At Oxford

Looking back upon his own recollections of Galsworthy, he could see how much he must have owed to the fact that he had himself breathed the atmosphere of that affluent mid-Victorian bourgeoise whose limitations and failings he had delineated with such delicate feeling in the Forsyte Saga. The tablet which had been cut for them by Mr. Eric Gill was, in accordance with the setting of that medieval cloister, sparing in words: "In memory of John Galsworthy, O.M., 1867-1933, novelist and playwright, sometime Commoner and Honorary Fellow of New College, this Tablet is erected by the Warden and Fellows."

Much more might have been said, Mr. Fisher continued, and perhaps much more should have been said, of this simple, direct, and most lovable character, for the innumerable readers of Galsworthy's plays and novels could seldom have stopped short of affection for the man whose own rare gifts of sympathy and compassion shone so strongly through all his works.

His First Play

Professor Gilbert Murray said Galsworthy was a life-long friend, for whose art and character he had a profound admiration. He first heard his name during an illness, when Mr. Granville Barker told him with some excitement that he had got a new play from a man who said it was his first, and Granville Barker had had added: "If it is his first, he has nothing to learn about the art of playwriting." That play was The Silver Box. He recalled Galsworthy's visit to Oxford when the Suffraigist movement was at its height to read a paper entitled "Gentles, Let US Rest." There was little argument, but it was just an appeal, so like him, to do away with the atmosphere of strife, and it created a profound impression among the undergraduates.

Galsworthy was an extraordinarily conscientious artist, and, considering the mass of his work, it was remarkable for the high level maintained. Victorians like Dickens and Thackeray sometimes repelled the moderns by the fault of allowing their high spirits to carry them away, but he doubted whether Galsworthy would repel future generations, because he was such a vigilant self-critic.

The Poet Laureate in unveiling the tablet, said he had never known tenderness for the penniless and distressed and heart-broken in so marked a degree in any other human being. He recalled the change which came over Galsworthy when at the age of 24 or 25 he ceased to care for the killing of animals for pleasure. A college porter who met him afterwards said, "Mr. Galsworthy, I should have known you anywhere except for your waistcoats, which are not what they were."

Jane Addams Was Foe Of Suffering

Hull House In Chicago Slums To Remain Monument Of Late Peace Worker

At Hull House, in the squalid slums of Chicago's West Side the late Jane Addams, a priestess of understanding among neighbors and of peace among nations, kept open house for prince and pauper alike. It was her shrine and it will remain her monument, says the New York Times.

This pioneer settlement house, which she founded forty-six years ago, blazed the trail for a scientific approach to the relief of poverty and suffering and was the parent of much of the social legislation of the last four decades.

Its founder and director, despite poor health, was the inspiration and fighting force behind a score of movements for reform and the betterment of mankind. Of all the causes she espoused, the dearest to her heart was the cause of disarmament and peace.

For her life-long devotion to this ideal, she, with Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, received the Nobel Peace Prize, her share of which she characteristically turned over to further the cause of peace.

Honored by Many Universities

More than a dozen universities, including Smith, Yale, Wisconsin and Chicago, recognized her achievements with honorary degrees and in May, 1931, Bryn Mawr bestowed upon her the M. Carey Thomas Prize of $5,000, awarded intermittently "to an American woman in recognition of eminent achievements."

On that occasion appreciation of her work came from President Hoover, President Masaryk of Czechoslovakia and Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, who had been a visitor at Hull House on one of his trips to the United States. On May 2, only a few weeks before her death, Miss Addams was the guest of honor at a dinner in Washington, at which she was hailed as one of the greatest living women by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes.

"Mother of Social Service"

Miss Addams has been called "the greatest woman in the world," the "mother of social service," "the greatest woman internationalist" and the "first citizen of Chicago." With her idealism, serene, unafraid, militant, was always paramount. Devoted to the cause of social and political reform, to the betterment of the economic condition of the masses, to world peace and to internationalism, Miss Addams's influence was world-wide. She was, perhaps, the world's best-known and best-loved woman.

She made enemies. Her views were sometimes considered dangerously radical. Socialists and other radicals met at Hull House, and her opponents sometimes forgot that her liberal attitude in permitting such meetings did not include a membership in the groups she tolerated. In the World War her efforts for peace were unabated even when the United States entered the struggle and the wartime hysteria which ensued obscured for a time the American public's realization of Miss Addams's purity of purpose and character.

World peace was forever dear to her heart, and from the time of the war she became more and more active in its behalf. But she did not ignore other causes. Lavishly she gave of herself to fight child labor, to lead political causes such as those of Colonel Roosevelt and the Progressive party in 1912 and of Senator La Follette and his Progressives of 1924, to battle for disarmament, for insurance against unemployment, old age and poverty, for woman suffrage and for equal rights of women. But she never left Hull House, her starting place, and remained as its resident head until her death.

She lectured from end to end of the United States. All over Europe and Asia she travelled, everywhere striving to alleviate the suffering of the masses, everywhere serene, helpful, capable, dauntless. She wrote many books. In each she pledged herself anew to fight for justice as she saw it.

Of Quaker Ancestry

Miss Addams was born in Cedarville, Ill., on Sept. 6, 1860, of Quaker ancestry. Had she chosen it, this woman who gave herself so unselfishly to the cause of the poor, the ignorant and the oppressed, could have enjoyed wealth and social position.

Her father, John H. Addams, a friend of Abraham Lincoln, was a banker who served from 1854 to 1870 in the Illinois Senate. Lincoln's creed of the equality of men became Miss Addams's ideal as a child.

In one of her books Miss Addams wrote:

"My father always spoke of the martyred President as Mr. Lincoln, and I never heard the great name without a thrill. I remember the day—it must have been one of comparative leisure, perhaps a Sunday—when at my request my father took out of his desk a thin packet marked 'Mr. Lincoln's Letters,' the shortest one of which bore unmistakable traces of that remarkable personality. These letters began, 'My Dear Double D-'ed Addams,' and to the inquiry as to how the person thus addressed was about to vote on a certain measure then before the Legislature was added the assurance that he knew this Addams 'would vote according to his conscience.'"

She wrote also that the first exciting suggestion "of the great world of moral enterprise and serious undertakings" came when she was 12 and she found her father mourning over the death of Guiseppe Mazzini, the Italian patriot. Her father explained how Mazzini had striven all his life for the freedom of his country.

"I obtained," she wrote, "a sense of the genuine relationship which may exist between men who share large hopes and like desires, even though they differ in nationality, language and creed; that those things count for absolutely nothing between groups for men who are trying to abolish slavery in America or to throw off Hapsburg oppression in Italy."

Saw Toynbee Hall in London

As a child Miss Addams regarded herself as an ugly duckling. She said she was pigeon-toed and twisted in the back so that her head leaned slightly to one side and she didn't want to have any one know she was the daughter of so fine a man as her father. But surgery cured her deformities and she became a young woman described as "beautiful, not pretty," "beautiful because of her remarkable expression." She became, too, graceful, erect, with a fine carriage.

After she was graduated from Rockford College in 1881, Miss Addams went abroad to complete her education. It was not the Alps, that impressed her, but rather the art galleries or the cathedrals slums of the great cities. More than ever she was determined to dedicate her life to the service of the poor.

She went to London and there saw Toynbee Hall, the first settlement house in the world. She was greatly impressed, as she was by the European slums she visited. Returning to the United States, she was ill for some months and then, in 1888, she studied for a time in Philadelphia.

In 1889, when she was 29 years old, Miss Addams and Miss Ellen Gates Starr, her friend, founded Hull House at 800 South Halsted Street, Chicago, "in the midst of horrid little houses" of the slums. Four years previously the stately red brick mansion had been built by Charles J. Hull on the outskirts of the city. By 1889, however, it stood in the heart of one of the most miserable neighborhoods of the city. The owner, Miss Helen Culver, gave the two women a free leasehold to the house and later to the land about it, on which twelve additional buildings were built.

Hull House Opened in 1889

Miss Addams moved into Hull House in September, 1889, and it was her home thereafter. It was then between a saloon and an undertaking shop, and there was an annex to a factory in its rear. Thousands of the foreign born—Miss Addams always held welcoming arms to the strangers—including Poles, Jews, Russians, Italians, Greeks, Germans, Irish and Bohemians were welcomed there. Negroes were also cordially received.

Persons later to be famous lived there in those early days. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Gerard Swope, who were married there. Mackenzie King, later Premier of Canada, Francis Hackett, and Proferror John Dewey, deam of American philosophers, and his family.

Hull House grew to be known as one of the largest and best-known of the nation's settlements. It commenced with the ordinary activities of children's clubs and free kindergartens and later it sponsored courses in languages, literature, music, painting, history, mathematics, elocution, dancing, wood carving, pottery, metal work, bookbindery dressmaking, lacework, cooking and basketwork. A labor museum was also established at Hull House.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Laughless One

Marcus Licinius Crassus, the grandfather of the triumvir of the same name, was called Agelastus One Who Does Not Laugh), because all during life he had never been known to laugh, according to Pliny the Elder. And Cicero adds that Crassus well deserved the name of Agelastus, although he did laugh upon a single occasion. Beholding a donkey eating thistles, the dour features of the Never Laughing One at last relaxed into a smile. The remark that escaped him at that moment, was "The Lips are like Lettuce."

Educators Ask Equitable Share Of Radio Time

Strong Criticism Voiced By Studebaker On Type Of Children's Programs

Educators presented their case to the Federal Communications Commission at Washington recently for a large share of radio time, in a national conference that is designed to thresh out the whole difficult problem, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education, denounced the present use of radio for propaganda that finds no proper rebuttal from opposing interests, and declared that education by radio has failed to keep pace with entertainment by radio.

Judge Eugene O. Sykes, chairman of the broadcasting division of the commission, stated that the present national conference would be limited to working out better methods of co-operation between educators and commercial broadcast interests, and that the question of allocation would not be on the agenda.

Children's Programs

Mr. Studebaker began with a strong criticism of the type of children's programs that have been broadcast. Commending the work of women's clubs and a statement by Anning S. Prall, chairman of the Communications Commission, he said, "these will have a salutary effect upon certain broadcasters who unfortunately do not have a sufficiently well developed sense of public responsibility to limit their production to wholesome programs."

In general, he said, the problem was "how can we perfect a system of controls by which this awe-inspiring and marvelous instrumentality of communication, the radio, shall be made more fully and fairly to represent the needs and desires of the American people?"

Unlimited Discussion

"I believe," he said, "we must make every effort to avoid indoctrination and propaganda as we ride the tides of turbulent and swift-moving social changes. That certainly does not mean that we should avoid the presentation of controversial issues. No one is more insistent than I am that every medium of education be used for unlimited discussion of controversial public questions. But I am equally insistent that the management of these questions be controlled only by motives of genuine impartiality.

"I want to see the ablest proponents of conflicting ideas and philosophies freely argue their cases before the bar of public opinion. By impartiality I mean that we must refuse to permit one side or one viewpoint to monopolize our time or any part of our educational machinery. The essence of democracy is freedom of choice. That means that the people have an inalienable right to hear every important point of view.

"We must depend upon the inherent good sense of the people to separate the wheat from the chaff, we must rely upon the truth to defend itself against error in the open arena bristling with ideas."

Action by Universities

Allen Miller, radio director, University of Chicago, described the new University Broadcasting Council, by which three universities in the Chicago area, Chicago University, Northwestern and DePauw, are pooling their radio resources, with a central downtown studio with wires leading to the respective college campuses. The year's budget for the proposed set-up, he said, would be about $55,000.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

312 Miles a Day to College

Mrs. Irene Graves of Clifton Forge, Va., is determined to get her college degree at New River State College, Montgomery, West Virginia, even if she does have to travel 312 miles each day going to and from classes. Mrs. Graves, who is a mother and housekeeper in addition to being a student, leaves her home in Clifton Forge on a C. & O. train shortly after 5 a.m. each day, arriving for her 9 o'clock class barely on time. Returning, she reaches home, 156 miles from the college, at 9 p.m. While traveling, she prepares her class assignments, and her "spare" time is taken up caring for her family.

A Champ Chicken Eater

"Buck" Fulford of Port Arthur, Texas, who claims to be a world's champion on the art of picking and eating a chicken recently set a record for anybody with nimble fingers and ravenous appetite to shoot at. Timed by a crowd assembled to witness his prowess, Fulford killed, picked, cooked and ate a chicken in 1 minute 50 seconds.

Fulford's system is: Hang the chicken by the feet, cut off the head and allow 40 seconds for it to die; then allow 10 seconds for scalding, 5 seconds for dressing and cutting, 30 seconds to cook in boiling and eating.

Memory Of Tatsubaba Revived At Gathering

many years that annual meeting has been in our home.

"Mrs. Worden and I were here in 1921, 14 years ago, for a delightful and profitable visit, and have come back now to see our many many old friends, who have been wonderful to us, and to see present day Japan so that we can talk intelligently to interested Americans on our return.

Told To Write Book

"Someone suggested I write a book entitled "After a lapse of 14 years". The changes since our former visit, which was before the earthquake, have been vast, particularly in Tokyo and Yokohama, and there would be much to write about, but I have read books and interviews by fleeting visitors, found them full of inaccuracies, wrong psychology, and complete lack of historical understanding, and vowed I would never be guilty of any superficial treatise I might prepare. My friends at home constantly come to me with questions about Japan and consider me an authority, because I have for nearly 30 years been something of a student of this part of the world and had many valuable Japanese contacts. I can generally answer their enquiries, set right some of their misunderstandings, and refer them to helpful books, which I gladly do. Among the great majority of my countrymen I almost feel I am an expert on the Orient, because I do know so much more of this part of the world than they do, but it is a rather sad satisfaction, as they know so little.

"It is cheering to be in Japan now, too. Everyone seems busy, people work hard, and seem to like it, and there is apparent prosperity. At home we have millions of unemployed great armies of men and women on relief, and tens of thousands on so called work-relief. The latter is hardly what any industrious person would call work, and the effect on those engaged in this makebelieve is very demoralising.

Brain Twisters

'Our government has tried experiment after experiment, nearly every one of which has been a failure, and a very expensive one hiwch has to be paid for. You have probably heard of the so-called 'brain trusters'; many are now calling them the 'brain twisters', and I hav heard them spoken of as the 'brain busters'. I am very old fashioned, and still believe in the old laws of supply and demand, the survival of the fittest, etc., but most of the old economic laws seem to have gone by the board. I am hopeful, and try to be philosphical, but frankly am not happy over conditions at home, and am not a believer in the moves constantly being made to induce a synthetic or artificial prosperity.

"Perhaps I might tell you one or two stories of the depression. Two men were talking together and one asked the other how business was. 'Fine', was the answer, 'this year better than last year, last year better than the year before'. 'Well, you are the first man I have heard talk that way; what is your business?'. "Oh, I am a red ink manufacturer".

"On another occasion two men met, and one, on being asked how business was, replied, 'Fine, 20 per cent better than next year.'

"There is yet another story of a minister advertising his sermen 'Has the depression passed and what have we learned from it?' Mrs. Bennet will sing 'Search me, Oh God'.

Tokyo Is Cheering

"Tokyo is cherring to me. You have splendid buildings and you are building more, which we are not. You have broad streets, parks, trees, activity and industry everywhere. I am on the American Council of St. Luke's International Medical Centre, and have been greatly impressed with this superb hospital here and the effective work being done. The late Dr. Teusler was a very dear personal friend, and as fine a Christian gentleman as it was ever my good fortune to know. He knew both Japan and his own country so well, and he was so eminently fair and just—a factor for great good in both countries, for intelligent understanding. We need such men on both sides of the Pacific, or rather on all sides of the Pacific.

"We foreigners, those who live here and those who visit, have a real duty and obligation to tell our own countrymen the truth about Japan and her problems, and not force them to rely on just the sensational news so often sent home by so many newspaper correspondents. I wish the news might be fuller and with a little more background of reason and history, for the benefit of readers abroad who so seldom know the background themselves. I feel particularly keen about this in connection with the Manchurian situation. I think the majority of Americans do not know there ever was a Sino-Japanese war and a Russo-Japanese war and have no conception of what Japan has spent in blood and treasure to save her life. If we could have a little more background for foreign news, particularly to America (I cannot speak for other countries) then I think the reaction at home would not be so brutal as it is.

"As for myself, I never miss an opportunity to talk about Japan. I am often considered pro-Japanese; Japan has been my particular interest outside of my bread and butter job, but I don't believe I am any more pro-Japanese than I am pro-Chinese. I am an American and pro-American, but I hope to be broad enough to see the position and problems of other nations in a fair light and not be bound by a narrow nationalism.

"I do not think the Japanese are perfect, and as an honest friend am from time to time severely critical, and my criticisms are frankly made to my Japanese friends. We are all human, and my observations as I travel round the world lead me to believe that most nations and most people have about the same virtues and faults. Japan to me has many contradictions, and I am reminded of the making of a cocktail; we put in liquor to make it warm, and ice to make it cold; sugar to make it sweet and lemon to make it sour. Then we shake it up, say 'Here's to you,' and drink it ourselves."

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Chained For 12 Years

Charles Neufeld, a German merchant residing in Assuan, Egypt, was on a business trip to the Soudan, when his guide betrayed him into the hands of the dervishes who were then rebelling against the Anglo-Egyptian Government. The rebels were led by the Khalifa Abdullai, spiritual successor to the promised Mohammedan saviour. Neufeld was immediately put in chain and transported to the redoubtable Saier prison, a Black Hole 20 feet square and holding an average of 230 shackled prisoners. Here he spent 12 years from 1887-1898, his shackled legs connected with a very short chain around his neck, which kept him in a permanently doubled up position There were no hygienic provisions in this cruel prison and practically no air or food was provided by the Government for the prisoners.

Neufeld was freed by Kitchener's victory over the wild derishes on September 2, 1898, recovered his health and recorded his terrible experiences in book.

Social and Personal Notes

DR. READ LEAVING

Dr. Rachel Read will leave Friday for her summer home at Karuizawa. Her winter home at 6 Reinanzaka, Akasaka-ku, will be occupied during the summer by Mr. Georges Alsot, French newspaper correspondent here.

MRS. ROGERS LEAVING

Mrs. Fred F. Rogers, wife of Captain Rogers, naval attache at the American Embassy, will leave Thursday for Karuizawa.

HOTEL IMPROVEMENTS

To make the Nyubai and the summer months pleasant, the Hotel New Osaka has installed a cooling system, not only in its dining, grill, and banquet rooms but also in most of the bedrooms. The system, one of the best known, is in use in the Carlton hotel, Washington, and the Statler hotel, Detroit.

HAS 70TH BIRTHDAY

Dr. Eigoro Kanasugi, beloved figure of the House of Peers, celebrated his 70th birthday last Saturday, but not alone. With him on the happy occasion were other members of the Japan Physician's Association.

The celebration was held in the association's hall in Kanda where a bust of Dr. Kanasugi, ordered by the association, was unveiled.

Among those who attended the party were: Admiral Keisuke Okada, Premier; Mr. Takejiro Tokonami, Minister of Communications; Mr. Koki Hirota, Minister of Foreign Affairs; Mr. Genji Matsuda, Minister of Education; Admiral Kanji Kato and a number of statesmen and noted physicians.

MONEY IS WANTED

The Tokyo Methodist Social Service Settlement is asking for money with which it may send to under-nourished and unfortunate children who otherwise would be confined to hot, dusty streets and gardenless houses for the summer, to its camp. Five yen will provide one child, too poor to pay for the outing, with railway fare and board for 10 days in camp or will subsidize two children who can only raise half the amount required by saving their coppers for a month in advance, according to the committee in charge.

Members of the committee are L. S. Albright, Annie W. Allen, G. Ernest Bott, and Marian G. Simons. The summer camp is at Takeoka and the gifts may be sent to one of five Tokyo Social Service Institutions, Aikei Gakuen, Aiseikan, Azuma Kyoreikan, Negishi Kaikan, Nippori Airindan. The treasurer is Miss Annie Allen, Aiseikan, 47, Nichome, Kameido, Joto-ku.

US Senate Passes Bigger Navy Bill

tion, spare parts and accessories.

The naval personnel will receive $169,000,000 for pay subsistence and transportatioin and the Naval Reserve $7,300,000, of which $5,000,000 is for aviation.

Nye Plans Separate Bill

Attempts by Senators Nye, Clark, Vandenberg and Pope, members of the Munitions Inquiry Committee, and others to restrict the appropriations have been constantly beaten down by points of order. These Senators said they wished to prevent excess profits for arms manufacturers, whom they accused of desiring to foment wars.

As the day ended, Mr. Nye announced that he still had two amendments pending, but, as it would be futile to try to attach these to an appropriation bill, he proposed to combine them with their predecessors into a separate bill to be offered later on.

These amendments would place State Department supervision over maneuvers such as those now held in the Pacific, prevent sending missions or naval instructors to foreign countries, and stop sale of naval designs by private shipyards to foreign governments.

Efficiency of Program Praised

One amendment by Senator Vandenberg, accepted yesterday, and remodeled today on suggestion of Senator Byrnes in charge of the bill, would force ship builders to submit to the Navy Department complete estimates on which they base bids for constructing "a naval vessel."

The building program contemplated under the bill, according to navy officials, would provide for the first time in many years an ordinary plan, which taken together with the Vinson-Trammell bill, would "result in the most economical and most efficient constructon of ships."

While Senator Byrnes patiently waited nearly five hours to bring the bill to a vote, Senators Hastings, Connally and Wheeler debated the farmers' march on Washington and the minority report on the Wheeler holding company bill.

Paris Offers Curb On Pact Violators

Urges European Protocol For Embargo On Export Of Raw Material And Arms To Them

The committee of thirteen named by the Council of the League of Nations on April 17 to study economic and financial sanctions against treaty repudiators opened its session on May 24 with a proposal by France for a European protocol aimed particularly at establishing an embargo on raw materials, says the New York Times Geneva Corespondent.

France also would have these sanctions based on Article XI instead of Article XVI, and wants Article XI reinterpreted so that the Council may act without the consent of the parties involved.

Article XI states that any threat of war is a matter of concern to the whole League, that the League shall take any action deemed wise an effectual to safeguard peace, that in such an emergency the Secretary General shall summon the Council on the request of any member, and that it is the "friendly right" of any member to bring to the attention of the Assembly or the Council any circumstance affecting international relations which threatens to disturb peace or the good understanding upon which it depends.

Article XVI provides for the imposition by the other members of economic and financial sanctions, including the severance of trade relations, against a member resorting to war in disregard of its covenant obligations, and for recommendation by the Council to the governments concerned "what effective military, naval or air force the members of the League shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the League."

The French gave their plan of dealing through the Council with any future German repudiation of the Treaty of Versailles in a memorandum that may be summarized as follows:

The protocol implementing Article XI would be opened for European force after a small number of adherences.

The signatories would pledge themselves, "in case of a breach—duly recorded by the Council—of an undertaking of concern to international security and the maintenance of peace in Europe," to do two things:

First, to execute all the recommendations the Council might make.

Secondly, without prejudice to these general obligations, "to concert together on measures to be taken with a view to prohibiting effectively export to the territory of the State guilty of the breach of arms and implements of war and all raw materials particularly suitable for the manufacture of such implements or other raw materials of a less specialized nature, or any other product of which it may be considered desirable to deprive the treaty-breaking State."

Execution of this would be by general or regional arrangements, as the case required, and "non-European States which, in so far as they are interested in the maintenance of peace, must desire the consolidation of European peace, would be requested under conditions to be considered to facilitate the operation of these various arrangements."

British Aid Held Vital

The memorandum stresses the need of a protocol covering especially key raw materials and makes "indispensable" the assistance of European States that possess or control the market for these essential raw materials. These States would seem to be especially Britain, France and the Netherlands.

"In view of the danger to peace resulting from a breach of an international undertaking, there can be in principle no question of contemplating immediate recourse to a series of measures as wide in scope as those which under Article XVI it is the duty of the members of the League to apply in case of a recourse to war," the memorandum says.

This plan, which represents the maximum French demands and is cut to suit the pact system that France has been building, got into difficulties from the start today.

Spanish Delegate Objects

Salvador de Madriaga of Spain, the only speaker, urged that before the League's punitive side was developed further, its pacific mechanism should be improved. To this end he proposed several projects:

First, that the treaty to strengthen the Council's means of preventing war originally proposed by the late Gustav Stresemann, German Foreign Minister, and signed by many States in 1931 be brought finally into force.

Secondly, that an agreement for control of the arms traffic be reached.

Thirdly, that Articles XVIII and XX of the covenant be so applied that the League would pass pudgment on all treaties submitted to it for registry and determine whether or not they conflicted with the covenant.

(In its present form Article XVIII provides merely for the registration with the Secretariat and publication by it of all treaties subsequently entered into by any member, while Article XX states that the members agree that the covenant abrogates all obligations or understandings inter se which are inconsistent with its terms.)

This last point might give some satisfaction to Germany, which contends that the Franco-Russian mutual aid and other French pacts are contrary to the covenant.

Television With Colors Is A Reported Discovery

Reports of a television invention by Leon Damas, a radio amateur, enabling pictures to be projected in original colors simultaneously with sound, were published in the Belgian press on June 1.

The newspaper Le Peuple said M. Damas made the invention "almost by chance" while experimenting with appartus for seeing in the darkness. The Nation Belge confirmed the reports, pointing out that M. Damas also has invented a calculating machine, according to the New York Times.

The invention was reported to employ a special screened lamp, wholesale production costs of which were said not to exceed $10.

Old Constitution In Cuba Restored

After Publication Of Changes In Document Martial Law Will Be Terminated

Simultaneously with the re-establishment on June 1 by the government of the original 1901 constitution in a somewhat modified form President Carlos Mendieta announced that he would not be a Presidential candidate in the elections that are expected to be held at the end of this year.

In a manifeso to the Cuban people Senor Mendieta briefly reviewed his administration, states a Havana despatch to the New York Times. He justified the harsh measures instituted last March when constitutional law was suspended and the island was placed under control of the military forces and recalled his promise to turn over the government to a president elected by the people.

"I make this renouncement of all Presidential aspirations at the coming elections, exercising the right of my own free will," he asserted. "I record this fact because I desire to clear up this historical truth which none can dispute and this renunciation costs me nothing whatsoever."

"State of War" to End

Upon publicatoin of the modifications of the Constitution in the official gazette, which is expected on Monday, the "state of war" under which the island is being ruled will be terminated and civil authority will be re-established.

While the modifications are not available it is known that the Platt Amendment, part of the original Constitution, was formally abrogated and the Isle of Pines was included as Cuban territory. The modifications grant woman suffrage, reduce the minimum age for Presidents from 45 to 33, for Senators from 35 to 30 and for Representatives to 21 years. The Vice Presidency, abolished by the Machado Constitution, was again created.

The status of the armed forces is expected to remain fixed as at present so the incoming government will have no authority to appoint or remove the heads of the army and navy. Many believe this will create dual authority.

The Constitution established with the beginning of the republic was reformed by President Machado in 1928 and was abolished by the De Cespedes Government in August, 1933, following the downfall of General Machado. The island was ruled by provisional statutes during the regency of five commissioners who took over the government on Sept. 4 1933, and during the Grau administration that followed.

The provisional Mendieta Government established a provisional Constitution in January, 1934, which is now being repealed in favor of the original Constitution following demands of most political factions.

Party Still Wants Mendieta

Despite the assertion of the President that he will not accept a Presidential nomination, the Nationalist party, to which he belongs, hopes to make him a joint candidate of the Liberal and Nationalist parties. Pressure is being brought on the President from many quarters.

Efforts are being made by adherents of Dr. Miguel Mariano Gomez, former Mayor of Havana, to combine with the Liberals to make him their Presidential candidate, but little progress has been made. Former President Mario G. Menocal will undoubtedly be the candidate of the Conservative party, but he is believed to have no chance because of the weakness of this party.

It is doubted that any revolutionary group will enter a Presidential candidate.

Threat Of 'Force' Made In Australian Quarrel

A threat that the "argument of force will be the only means left to the people of Western Australia in their determined desire for secession" was voiced recently by H. K. Watson, chairman of the Dominion League of Western Australia.

His statement followed upon eight months of attempts by the West Australian secession delegation to get action from Parliament, says the New York Times. A joint committee of the House of Commons and House of Lords announced Saturday it had rejected their petition on the grounds it would be unconstitutional for Parliament to take legislative action on a question of secession.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Lake Of Soap

In Grant Count, Washington, is located a lake of many peculiari ties, the most curious of which is the water itself. During a windy day, or when the water is otherwise agitated, its surface and the shore are covered with a thick foam. Its waters are excellent for swimming, but dark-haired people are hesitant about going in lest their hair turn blond, due to the action of the sun on the mineral contents of the water. The Lake is also noted for the supposed remedial value of the water as a cure for gangrenous tissue, according to U.S. Government experiments conducted in December 1932.

Eruption Startles Iceland; No Volcanoes Nearby

A volcanic eruption in the Valley of Axarfiord in Northern Iceland, miles from volcanoes, startled geologists recently. A close study will be made.

Although there was no earthquake, a fissure 300 meters long (984 feet) suddenly opened in the earth, filled with glowing lava which set fire to surrounding birch trees, states a report to the New York Times from Reykjavik, Iceland.

No lava has begun to flow, but several farms are in the broad valley nearby. Fears were expressed for their safety should a flow commence.

German Lodge Dissolves To Foster Reich's Unity

The German Order of Druits voted voluntary dissolution on May 25 because "the State needs all energies for its powerful upbuilding" and "small, split groups do not further that object."

Th Druits, established in 1872, have about 15,000 members.

Nazi officials warmly applauded the decision, according to the New York Times, a spokesman saying: "The Druits are the first to realize spontaneously that there is no room in the Third Reich for orders and lodges. Let the remaining organizations with similar mystic rites speedily follow the Druids' example, lest the State suppress them forcibly."

Sun's Rays Make Ice In Home-Built Device

Otto H. Mohr, a California rancher whose hobby is invention, has built an ice-making machine operated by the sun's rays—and he has the ice to prove it.

The machine is a box-like device in which is set a nine-inch spherical lens. Below the lens is a pipe containing oil to serve as a heat conductor. There are two other pipes filled with ammonia.

The operation begins with the heat vaporiing the ammonia, sending it through tubes into Mohr's home, where it is condensed as the ice-making process develops.

"If the sun's rays are hot enough," said Mohr, "I can make enough ice in one day to serve me for a year."

Germany Hopeful Of Rich Oil Yield

Nation-Wide Drilling Campaign Shows Extensive Fields Can Be Developed

A nationwide drilling exploration of German soil to a depth of 10,000 feet was said to have revealed oil wells "similar to those in Pennsylvania and West Virginia," that are expected to make the Reich's army and industry free from the necessity of importing foreign lubricants.

It was Harry Sinclair, American oil man, who gave Germany its cue. In 1930, after research work through the Hanover oil fields, he told the Germans that the region, if properly exploited, could "supply the entire domestic needs," according to the New York Times. His plan to form a North European oil company, however, never was carried out, partly because of German objections.

To assure strict State control of the lands, the Nazis deprived the owners of the right to permit exploitation.

About 10 million marks will be spent by the Nazis in this year's research campaign to subsidize the companies drilling for oil. Without fixing the exact amount of the loans it has been decreed that the treasury shall contribute up to 50 per cent of the drilling costs.

German crude oil production jumped to 312,352 tons last year from 232,000 in 1933. It was hoped by the Nazis that the results of this year's campaign would increase the annual production to at least 650,000 tons, with still more in succeeding years.

While geologists are combing the country for new prospects, efforts are being concentrated on the wells of seven districts in Western and Southern Germany.

The province of Hanover produces 68 per cent of the entire crude output, and with 92 wells working, is the center of the industry in Germany.

About 126 research drillings were made in the Muenster territory and experts are confident the area will give a greater return than Hanover.

Charge Against P. Lord Is Dropped By Australia

The Australian Government has dropped the Seth Parker incident, the Ministry of Defense announcing it was convinced that Philipps Lord, radio entertainer and captain of the four-masted schooner, did not ask for assistance unnecessarily last Februaary, says a recent report in the New York Times.

The warship Australia, with the Duke of Gloucester aboard, twice responded to SOS calls from the Seth Parker.

The information that the Australian Government did not intend to make any charge for aiding Mr. Lord was contained in a letter sent to him by Captain MacLeod of the Australia, who had been asked in a letter from Mr. Lord whether he believed charges that the South Parker's SOS calls were a hoax.

Peace Drives Seen As Peril To U.S.

Rear Admiral Phelps Warns Of 'Serious Bombardments' By Pacifist Organizations

Officers of the United States Army and Navy, including several former leaders of military and naval forces, joined with members and guests of the Veterans Corps of Artillery, Military Society of the War of 1812, at the annual Memorial Day luncheon of that organization in the Hotel Pierre, Fifth Avenue and Sixty-first Street, New York City on May 30.

The Artillery Corps served as Guard of Honor and escort to Mayor La Guardia and reviewing officers at the memorial ceremonies at the Soldiers and Sailors Monument during the forenoon, says the New York Times.

Rear Admiral William W. Phelps, retired commandant of this naval district, in an address at the luncheon, urged the several hundred persons present to guard against the "serious bombardments" from pacifist orgarizations now current and to preserve the freedom and liberty which had been passed on by their ancestors.

Referring to the inherent rights of an American to be protected in a war zone as a citizen of neutral power, Admiral Phelps declared that if the right were withdrawn, as had been proposed, it would mean that America would permit "a foreign power to dictate a war zone."

Adding that this would be the equivalent of "giving power to a closed sea at will," he asserted that the transporting of freight "at the risk of the freighter" also would imply the surrender of the neutral rights now recognized by international law, and would make of the neutral nation "a submissive ally."

Lieut. Gen. Robert Lee Bullard, retirde; Rear Admiral Yates Stirling Jr. and Brig. Gen. Charles H. Cole of the Ordnance Division also spoke, following the introduction by Brig. Gen. Charles Elliot Warren, commander of the corps, who presided.

Awards for "long and faithful service" in the organization were made to the following officers: Brigade Major Chandler Smith, for thirty years' service; Captain Quartermaster Norman F. Cushman, thirty years; Captain Adjutant Mortimer P. Arnold, twenty years; Second Lieut. Joseph L. Regan, ten years; Musician John Robinson, ten years.

Bronze medals for 100 per cent attendance at drills last Winter also were awarded to nine officers and non-commissioned officers, seven privates and eight members of the fife and drum corps.

Metropolitan Opera Adds Improvements

Spending $100,000 On Air-Cooling And Ventilation

An appropriation for air-cooling and improving the ventilation of the Metropolitan Opera House has been made by the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company, it was announced recently. The sum was said to be about $100,000, bringing the total spent on modernizing the theater to $500,000.

The statement of the directors pointed out that "while the work to be done does not propose a year-round air-conditioning system, it is believed that the former lack of ventilation at the Opera House, which has been the cause of criticism and complaint on the part of many of the patrons of opera, will be thoroughly corrected."

The decision was due also to the new policy of the Metropolitan Opera Association, which, as a result of its agreement with the Juilliard Musical Foundation, plans to give a supplementary season of popular-priced opera in May and June, says the New York Times.

The new improvement, which will make the house comfortable during the early Summer, will be undertaken in a few days and will be finished before the opening of the season on Dec. 16.

In their announcement the directors said:

"The subject of fully air-conditioning the Opera House was given careful study by the directors, who had the assistance and cooperation of several engineering experts. The importance of impairing in no way the acoustic properties of the auditorium was one of the factors which had to be kept in mind in guiding the directors.

"Perhaps no large opera house in the world has such excellent acoustic qualities as the Metropolitan, and it would be unfortunate if a too complete modernization of the building were undertaken at the expense of conditions so satisfactory to artists and patrons alike.

"The comfort of the patrons of opera is of prime importance to the success of the new management, which has received such a cordial response from the public and which is striving earnestly to continue the brilliant record of the past and to give the people of New York opera of superior quality."

Minor repairs already approved by the directors will also be made $40,000. Last Summer the house was renovated inside and out and new electrical and lightning equipment and new chairs in the orchestra were installed.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Long-Named Official

The long title of the official literally translated reads: Vice President of the Commission for Stopping the Increase of the Allowance of Victuals. The position was created during the World War, when food rations were strictly regulated and Bohemia was part of the Austria-Hungarian Monarchy.

Buchan Hails Amity Of Canada And U.S.

Undefended Frontier Stressed By British Statesman

The most impressive fact in the world today is that the 3,000-odd mile frontier between Canada and the United States is utterly undefended, Lord Tweedsmuir, better known as John Buchan, the author and Governor General designate to Canada, declared at the Canada Club, London, at a dinner in his honor on May 27. G. H. Ferguson, Canadian High Commissioner, presided.

"That is a sign which all can read," said Lord Tweedsmuir. "It is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, a summons to a new and better way of life."

Discussing the depression, he said no frontier were left on the physical map, but they must be sought in the world of spirit and mind.

"A country may have immense and undeveloped resources," he declared, "but they do not become wealth until and unless they are related to the demands and uses of the rest of the world. A fresh economic and social mechanism has to be created and new countries are in difficulty as compared with older ones—they have had less experience in this kind of creation and have to improvise in a brief time the machinery that old lands may have already constructed at leisure.

"That is the problem in the United States today. It is Canada's problem. It is, in some sense, the problem of every people, and its successful solution depends on how far a nation brings to the task a disciplined spirit, a stout heart and a clear head."

Premier Richard B. Bennett of Canada cabled congratulations, declaring "The warmth of the greeting extended to him tonight is but an indication of the hearty welcome that awaits him."

Reich Plans To Televise Events In 1936 Olympics

German radio authorities announced recently that events in the 1936 Olympic Games would be broadcast immediately for television reception.

This announcement was the crowning point of the first television congress, meeting in the Berlin Radio House to inspect the apparatus now available and to study recent developments in the new science, says the New York Times. The congress closed with the presentation of a television broadcast of a sports tournament from a near-by athletic field.

Roosevelt Seen In About-Face On State Rights

Critics Charge He Has Bolted To Idea Of Reshaping Constitution Since 1931

Critics of President Roosevelt charged recently that he has had in the back of his mind, virtually from the beginning of his administration, the desire to modify the concept of states' rights as it applies to economic and social problems which he expressed in Washington on May 31 in his press conference exposition of his views on the effects of the Supreme Court's N.R.A. decision. They charge, moreover, that this is a reversal of attitude as expressed by him while still Governor of New York.

The basis of the deduction that he has desired a "modernization" of the Constitution to facilitate contemplated social and economic reforms since early Administration days was found in a carefully prepared address which George H. Dern, Secretary of War, presented at a governors' conference at Sacramento, Calif., July 24, 1933. The charge of a reversal of attitude as to states' rights was based on accounts of expressions by Mr. Roosevelt, particularly in dealing with prohibition repeal, long before the 1932 convention in which he won the Presidential nomination.

In support of the latter view, critics of the President's attitude called attention to an account of his views written by Jay Hayden, Washington correspondent of "The Detroit Free Press," and published in that newspaper on May 2, 1931, and particularly to his quotation at that time of James Bryce.

1931 Views Contrasted

Mr. Hayden wrote: "As expressed by himself, Governor Roosevelt's position is perfectly clear. He regards the Eighteenth Amendment as a great national mistake, and he favors its revision in a way that will permit local option on the liquor question not only by the forty-eight states but by counties and lesser communities.

"He is strongly opposed to the return of the saloon, and he believes than even if the Eighteenth Amendment should be repealed there would be no danger of its return. In New York, for example, he declares at least half the countries would continue dry even if liquor was permitted by state legislative action. Above all, he believes the communities desiring to remain dry should be protected by national legislation.

"Explaining his thought on the liquor question, Governor Roosevelt repeated a remark he once heard from the lips of James Bryce, the famous British diplomat and historian. Mr. Bryce said the United States had a great advantage over most of the nations in that its forty-eight states constituted as many laboratories in which governmental policies could be tried out one against the other without affecting the whole country. The liquor issue, Mr. Roosevelt said, is the sort of thing that ought to be so handled. A law on this subject suitable to one state obviously does not fit all the others, and there should be differentiation even as between communities in the same state."

1933 Stand Shows Shift

Mr. Dern's speech at Sacramento, as well as the President's expressions are described as showing a sharp contrast between his states' rights philosophy then and now. Mr. Dern, it is recalled, had been, as Governor of Utah, a close associate of Mr. Roosevelt in the leadership was credited with being Mr. Roosevelt's representative at the Sacramento meeting of the governors, the first to follow his inauguration. His speech attracted little general attention at the time, but, viewed in the light of the President's own declaration on the subject, it is now regarded as the initial feeler to sound out sentiment for the changes Mr. Roosevelt desires.

Court action to curb New Deal moves was just coming under discussion when Secretary Dern delivered his address and had not reached proportions where it was taken seriously. Nevertheless, he devote a large part of it to the difficult relationship of Supreme Court and Federal power under changed conditions of modern times.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Blind Sportsman

Captain Gerald Lowry, of the Second Royal Irish Rifles, was totally blinded in an engagement on the Western Front in October, 1914. With his sight completely gone, the left the Hospital on Christmas, 1914, firmly determined to begin life all over again. He has admirably succeeded. Captain Lowry, now a noted Doctor of Osteopathy by profession, is a skillful swimmer, runner, boatman, boxer and golfer. In this latter sport, Captain Lowry has become very proficient. The caddy places the ball against the clubhead, and tells the sightless player how far ahead the next hole is. Then the Captain swings, and achieves a 225 yard drive from the tee without difficulty.

The First Wedding in 774 Years

The village of Regenstein, situated within the ruins of an ancient castle, in the State of Brunswick, Germany, is an exclave belonging to the State of Prussia. The village is the smallest constituted community in Germany, having only seven inhabitants. The last weddfng to be celebrated in Regenstein took place in 1161, within a year after the castle was erected.

Until 1935, when the daughter of the local innkeeper and Mayor celebrated her marriage in Regenstein, the interval of 774 years was entirely free of any marriages in the locality.

'Failure' Buys Spider By Mail To Die of Poison

Fantastic Suicide Attempt On Way To Success, Say Doctors, Lacking Antidote

A fantastic method of self-destruction apparently was succeeding at City Hospital, Worcester, Mass., on June 1, where Stephen Liarsky, twenty-six year-old wandered, lay unconscious with the deadly virus of a black widow spider he had imported from California coursing through his veins. Physicians admitted they knew of no way to combat the poison.

In a glass container in the hospital laboratory was the sable messenger of death. It is a large-bodied creature with eight long legs, says the New York Herald Tribune. There are small pincers at the head and it is entirely black except for a red dot on the belly.

The story was told in notes, letters and postal cards found in the man's room. One indicating suicide, read:

'To whom it may concern: Whenever a man usually takes his life it is always proper to give the reason. My reason is because, first—I have no job. I have no one in this world except a woman I love terribly, and she is too good for me. I am ashamed of myself because I am a failure and not a success. God bless Rose."

Another note, apparently penned after the spider had infected the man, in which he tried to describe his sensations, read:

"I feel the effects now. The room is going around and around. I can barely see what I am writing. Maybe it is the end. Who knows? I don't care. It is very pleasant. Yes. No."

That note ended in a scrawl, which was difficult to decipher.

The black widow was found beside Liarsky's bed in a perforated cardboard box, together with a postal card bearing the printed information that the insect's bite was deadly, that there was no known cure. The card also advised Liarsky that for $5 he might purchase a larger black widow with an infant. The card was signed "R. W. Thorp," and bore a Los Angeles postmark.

Other postmarks indicated the spider was first sent to Keen N. H., where Liarsky had been living before his last visit to Worcester, and forwarded to him a letter signed "James Betzes," of Keene, advised Liarsky: "I am sending you a letter and a box which came from California. I don't know whether I will ever see you again or not, but don't forget to send the belt and holster for my revolver."

Another postcard, dated more than a month ago, found in his room read:

"Dear Hon—I am off tomorrow and I want to see you very much. I know you are working at Kellogg's (a restaurant across the street), but I cannot see you. Rose."

Police said they believed they knew who "Rose" was.

A postal apparently written by Liarsky but never mailed, addressed to "Miss Edythe Lowry, 8003 Champagne Street, Montreal," read: "Dear Elsie—I am not writing much this time but I want to hear from you at once." It was unsigned.

"NO" PLAYS TO BE GIVEN

Three "No" dance plays will be presented at the Hotel New Grand at 1 p.m. Sunday under the auspices of the Yokohama Kanzekai.

The program will include "Shunkan" by Mr. Kyutaro Hashioka; "Matsukaze" by Mr. Manzaburo Umewaka; and "Aoinoue" by Mr Sakon Kanze.

The stories of the three dance plays are as follows:

"Sunkan", will be played with Mr. K. Hashioka, as Priest Shunkan. In the prosperous days of the Heike, three men were exiled to an uninhabited island, as they had attempted to destroy this all powerful clan. They were Priest Shunkan, Lord Naritsune and Yasuyori: the first being looked upon as the leader of the plot. Naritsune and Yasuyori, longing for the capital where they had left their families, prayed daily to the gods for a safe and speedy return. But Shunkan looked unconcernedly upon what they were doing.

Just then a happy event took place in the capital, and as was the custom of the day, a general pardon was to be granted all the prisoners, and at this isolated island, too, a messenger arrived in a ship with a pardon. In great joy it was read by Lord Yasuyori. The name of Narimitsu and Yasuyori were mentioned, but nowhere was to be found that of Shunkan. Holding the pardon in his hand, Priest Shunkan looked into it, turned it over and over again, and fell in despair.

By and by the messenger made the two noblemen go aboard the ship. Shunkan, running after them, begged to be allowed to accompany them, but was refused. All alone in tears, now utterly deserted, lying upon the shore he gazed sadly after the ship as it disappeared.

"Matsukaze" by Mr. M. Umewaka, explains that towards the evening an itinerant priest happened to pass by the Bay of Suma, and looking at a pine-tree planted there in memory of the two sisters, Matsukaze and Murasame, he was reminded of the old love affairs of these women. Just then two maidens appear along the shore, lighted by the bright autumnal moon, drawing a seawater carrier behind them.

He begged them to give him a night's lodging in their house, and he was heartly received.

They were in reality, the spirits of Matsukaze and Murasame. The priest, narrated to them the love story of those two sisters and Yukihira-no-Chunagon, a court noble of high birth, who stayed in this place for three years attended by them. Then Matsukaze in "Eboshi" and "Kariginu" began to dance. The scene of uneffacable love went on until the dawn. At dawn the priest discovers that it was only a dream.

"Aoi-no-Uye", by Mr. S. Kanze, is centered about the wife of Kikaru Genji. She was lying ill in bed, possessed of an evil spirit. A priest was called upon to chant and break the spell and call forth the evil spirit. So the spirit of Rokujo-no-Miyasudokoro, Prince Rokujo, who had been cursing Aoi-no-Uye, was dragged forth by the power of the chant. The spirit, appearing in the form of a woman raving and cursing, uttered many a word of jealousy and resentment, and attempted to carry away the sick, but was interrupted by the priestess.

By and by a saintly priest was called forth to pray on behalf of the sick wife. The spirit of jealousy now in form of a demoness, again attempted to torture the woman in bed. The priest interrupted her and thereupon began the strife between the power of prayer and that of cursing. In the end overwhelmed by the power of the prayer, the woman raving in jealousy was released by promising to give up her cursing.

DANCE AND VOCAL RECITAL

A dance and vocal recital will be given at the amphitheater in the Yokohama park at 7 p.m. Friday under the auspices of the Yokohama Y.W.C.A. and the Yokohama Boyeki Shimpo.

Soviet Citizens In Manchoukuo Return To USSR

About 3,000 Have Left Harbin Recently For Homeland; Others Plan Reentry

Those who read the Russian emigrant press of Harbin are fed with constant string of statements regarding Soviet Russia, which are in many cases quite absurd, and lately articles have appeared stating that Soviet citizens are being compelled by the Soviet Consul General to return to the U.S.S.R. whether they like it or not.

All these statements are contrary to the actual facts, says F. H. Best in a despatch from Harbin to the North China Daily News on June 6. In the first place it must be remembered that the agreement signed at Tokyo regarding the sale of the railway distinctly states in one of its paragraphs that all Soviet railway servants must leave Manchuria within a certain time, but in no case does this mean that they shall be compelled to do so by the Soviet authorities who, on the contrary, are not forcing any person to return to Russia if he does not want to do so.

The total number of the Soviet railway servants at the time when the Tokyo agreement was signed was somewhere between 6,500 and 7,000, but this figure is for actual servants only, and does not include their families, therefore the fact that eighteen train loads of Soviet citizens have already left Harbin and that these trains have carried away about 3,000 persons, does not necessarily mean only railway servants. As an instance, today's train carried 168 Soviet citizens, but these are the families of 41 railway servants consequently on the deduction that the average family of the railway servant consists of four persons, it may be assumed that not more than 800 servants have yet left Harbin

Emigrants Going Back

The Soviet Consulate at the present moment is besieged from early morning to late at night by those who are returning to Russia, and not only those who are Soviet citizens and railway servants, but hundreds of emigrants who do not see the chance of making their living in this country, and are, therefore, begging to go back to their own native land.

The cumbersome application forms which had to be filled in formerly, giving all sorts of particulars regarding the family of the applicant, their political views, etc., have been superseded by application forms whic simply ask for the full name, etc., of the indivdual who desires to go to Soviet Russia with his family.

It is perfectly true that officers of the Tzar's army who ten years ago would on no account have been allowed to re-enter Russia owing to their having taken up arms against the Soviet, are now freely admitted, provided that they have not been engaged in any active work against the Soviet regime during the past ten years of their residence in Manchuria.

The figures regarding the number of Soviet citizens and Russian emigrants in Harbin and along the railway line cannot be taken as fairly reliable, as owing to a Soviet citizen having to pay the Manchoukuo authorities double the fee for his passport that a Russian emigrant has to, there are many Soviet citizens who notwithstanding the fact that they are registered at the Soviet Consulate, have taken out police residential certificates, calling themselves emigrants, when actually they are citizens of the U.S.S.R. Such people are now most anxious to secure permission to enter Soviet Russia, as in many cases they have children who reside in Harbin on a Soviet passport, or in some cases the husband has a Soviet passport while the wife is entered at the police station as an emigrant.

To Train Abroad

Such complications as these make it very difficult to ascertain what is the correct number of Soviet citizens now resident in Harbin, and what is the number of the real emigrants who do not possess a Soviet passport. Soviet citizens, and particularly the younger ones, who are anxious to go to Peiping to study Chinese, or who desire to go to England and America to study specialities, are given full permission to do so by the Soviet Consulate, it being understood that they shall have no difficulty to return to the U.S.S.R. when they so desire. Naturally, such young people who have funds, owing to their having served on the railway in Harbin can educate themselves in foreign countries at their own expense, and as Soviet Russia is always on the look-out for clever technical men, they will be welcomed, as soon as they conclude their education.

The principal difficulty at the present moment in sending away Soviet railway servants is that rolling stock of the Railway administration is hardly sufficient to carry the number of people that are returning to Russia, and in consequence of this they have to put up with the roughest freight cars and suffer great inconveniences, but on crossing the frontier, the trains put at their disposal consist almost entirely of third class passenger cars, and on every train there is a dining car and a recreation car, so that it is no wonder that foreigners who have met the returning railway servants at the frontier, Chita and Irkutsk, state that everyone of them bore happy faces and were evidently pleased with all that they saw. At the rate at which the railway servants are now leaving Harbin, it seems hardly possible for all of them to be out of the country before September, and in any case, as the Soviet authorities are not compelling them to leave, any compulsory measures to be taken will have to emanate from other sources than the Soviet.

Australia Decides On Public Works

£26,050,000 To Be Allocated By Loan Council For This Purpose

A total of £26,050,000 for public works in Australia for the next year was decided on by the Loan Council of the Australian Federal Govt. which met at Canberra on May 30, after a long and acrimonius discussion. Including the financing of deficits, the total figure becomes approximately £31,000,000, about £1,000,000 more than originally planned for the loan program.

The various allocations for public works, according to The Times, London, are:

Commonwealth, £5,750,000; New South Wales, £8,000,000; Victoria, £4,000,000; Queensland, £3,000,000; South Australia, £2,100,000; Western Australia, £2,600,000 and Tasmania, £600,000. The figure was an increase of £750,000 on the amount to which the Loan Council committed itself in the negotiations with the Commonwealth Bank the day before.

When the Loan Council met that day, Mr. Dunstan, Premier of Victoria, refused to abandon his request for a substantially increased allocation of loan money for public works next year, and declared emphatically that Victoria would not voluntarily agree to any adjustment which failed to give an equitable allocation. He added that unless the concession was made he would insist on the application of the allocation formula provided in the Financial Agreement.

The dismay which this pronouncement caused was due to the discovery late the day before that the original estimate of the amounts receivable by the States through the formula was based on a misconception of the manner in which the formula should be applied, says The Times, London. Whereas it had been believed that only loan expenditure on public works for the last five years should be taken into account when applying the formula, the Federal Crown law officers supported Mr. Dunstan's view that the calculations should be based on loan expenditure both for public works and for the financing of deficits.

On this calculation Victoria's allocation would be increased to £4,250,000, and that of New South Wales reduced to £8,000,000. The situation was aggravated by the contention of Mr. Casey, the acting Federal Treasurer, that the Commonwealth needed a larger amount than the £5,000,000 originally allocated.

A long and heated discussion ended in a proposal to increase the total loan program from £30,000,000 to £31,000,000. Although Mr. Casey pointed out that it would be a departure from the agreement with the Commonwealth Bank, the proposal was pursued, and ultimately allocation on the basis of a total for public works of £26,050,000 and a total for the year, including the financing of deficits, of approximately £31,000,000 was agreed to.

Rigid Film Censorship Now Effective In Austria

A rigid film censorship came into operation in Austria recently which aims to prevent the showing not only of morally offensive pictures, but especially also those with political tendencies hostile to the present Government.

Chief responsibility for film control falls upon Vienna, for most films are shown in Vienna first, according to the Christian Science Monitor. No sanction will be given to films apt to offend religious, moral or patriotic feelings, or detrimental to the reputation of the Austrian state. The final decision will also be dependent upon the approval of an advisory board consistig of three members appointed by the Government and of one member from each of the following institutions: the police, the Roman Catholic Church, "Fatherland Front," City Board of Education, Popular Instruction Board, Parents' Association, Film Producers, Film Dealers, cinema owners and of three other members.

The police representative is entitled to veto a film or part of it when he thinks it may disturb public order, safety, or violate any laws.

In case of an appeal being made against the prohibition of a film, the advisory council may arrange for another test performance, so as to have the verdict revised, if possible.

The censorship is extended to cover film propaganda, posters, bills, etc. Titles sanctioned by the censor must not be altered.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Bouncing Along

Richard L. Prendeville of the Veteran's Hospital in Johnson City, Tennessee, who for many years has suffered from the lasting effects of influenza, contracted a peculiar disease diagnosed as encephalitis blepharospasm, which made it impossible for him to walk. However, various experiments were tried, and it was found that by bouncing or dribbling a small rubber ball along the sidewalk, he could keep his eyes open and hold his body almost erect. As soon as he starts bouncing a ball, he instantly gains complete relaxation, body control, his eyes stay open, and he walks freely, as long as he can keep the ball bouncing.

circus background.

The picture has for background the varied entertainment features of the World's Fair in Chicago. The hero is seen as a player of puppets, manging the strings, and the little figures add not a little to the show atmosphere of this play of American show life.

"The Best Man Wins" with Edmund Lowe and Jack Holt

The program at the Nippon Gekijo from July 1 also includes "The Best Man Wins," a Columbia picture, with Edmund Lowe, Jack Holt, Bella Lugosi and Florence Rice.

The situation in the story of "The Best Man Wins," which calls for the use of the "Gordon suit" concerns the attempt of Holt, as a harbor police officer, to apprehend Edmund Lowe, in the more familiar diving suit, trying to recover smuggled gems which had been dropped overboard in an oil drum from an incoming liner. The "Gordon Suit" made it possible for Holt to approach his quary unsuspected, since the police boat could remain in the distance, out of sight of the smugglers.

The scene was photographed by means of a diving bell, in which cameras were lowered to the ocean floor, and the action filmed through a plate glas window. Bela Lugosi, of "Dracula" fame, appears in the role of the wily smuggler, with Florence Rice as the girl who causes all the rowdy, riotous, romantic rivalry between Edmund Lowe and Jack Holt.

The chief interest of the play is sustained by the struggle between two deep sea divers. For these scenes the camera was busy beneath the ocean off Santa Catalina Island, where the famous glass-bottomed boats take tourists out to ese a strange world of coral, flying fish and other under-water marvels.

Shooting through the plate glass "window" of a huge diving bell, cameramen screened more than half of this thrilling photoplay vividly revealing the undersea hazards in the daily life of divers. One dramatic scene shows Holt rescuing his diving buddy, who is pinioned to a wrecked ship by a loose timber which crushes his arm. Without stopping for his diving suit Holt is quickly lowered on the salvage ship's anchor chain to Lowe, cuts his lines and is hauled up from the deep.

"Servant's Entrance" With Janet Gaynor and Lew Ayres

Two Tokyo favorite screen stars will be seen at the Hibiya Gekijo from July 1, when "Servants' Entrance," a Fox picture, will be given on the program. Reunited for the first time since their initial costarring in "State Fair," Jaent Gaynor and Lew Ayres are seen again as gay young sweethearts.

In their newest roles Janet portrays a merry million-heiress of an automobile manufacturer who goes from riches to poverty, and back again, while Lew is a chauffeur who goes from poverty to riches. Starting from opposite rungs of the social ladder, they meet at the bottom. The climb upward is fraught with humorous and fascinating adventures.

Janet's descent to poverty is motivated by a desire to become a useful woman—to learn to cook, sew, bake a cake and take care of babies. So she disappers through the front door of her own palatial home, and makes her way to the servants' entrance of another, masquerading as a maid. It is thus that she meets Lew, a chauffeur with an inventive turn of mind whose passion is a new type of motorboat. To win his love, and to make him capitalize his invention without revealing her identity, become Janet's amusing problems.

The story was adapted for the screen by Samson Raphaelson from the famous story by Sigrid Boo, and was directed by Frank Lloyd, who won the last Academy Award for his handling of "Cavalcade." As in the case of "Cavalcade," incidentally, "Servants' Entrance" was produced under the presonal supervision of Winfield Sheehan.

KOBE NEWS

Mr. Ernesto Bellino, Consul for Panama in the Awabori Building, Nishi-ku, Osaka, has been officially appointed to assume consular jurisdiction over Kobe in addition to his present duties.

A reception in honor of "Mr. and Mrs. America" who arrived at Osaka on June 22, was given at the Central Public Hall, the function being attended by 600 representatives of primary schools and 300 girls of the Otemaye Girl's High School, in addition to Deputy Mayor Takiyama, Mr. Hiasa, Chief of the Osaka Railway Division, Mr. Imamura, Representative of the Japan-America Society of Kansai, and others.

The dolls went to Kobe that afternoon, where a reception was held in the K. R. and A. C. gymnasium under the joint auspices of the Kobe Municipal Office, the Hyogo Prefectural Office and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Ending his extensive tour of Japan Proper, Mr. Efrem Zimbalist, world-famous violinist, gave his farewell recital at the Kaiin Kaikan, Kobe, on the evening of June 25. His "Concerto in Dmajor" was the outstanding selection of the evening.

A reduction of fares has been allowed on all the N.Y.K. European service ships, effective with the sailing of Hakozaki Maru on June 27. This is in an effort to encourage traveling by sea to Europe and also to meet the competition of foreign vessels. This reduction is not given to the passengers aboard the new motor-ships Terukuni Maru and Yasukuni Maru.

A motion was introduced for the creation of a new cemetery for the foreign community in Kobe by Mayor Ginjiro Katsuda at a meeting of the municipal council the other day. This proposal was made in view of the fact that the Ono cemetery is not equal to further burials while the Kasugano cemetery will be taken up within a few years. He went so far as to recommend Shuho-gawara at the terminus of the recently opened Urayama drive-way along Mt. Futatabi.

It was decided to take up the matter at the next meeting.

Mr. Suzon Gerard Frederik van der Chijis died on Sunday at his residence in Kobe. During the past 25 years, he has worked for the Van Nierop company, Kobe, for several years, and then joined the Standard Oil Company of New York, staying in Shanghai, Hankow and Chinkiang. Later he was married in China, and, returning to Japan, he joined the Wiersum Shokai as shipping manager. He is survived by Mrs. van der Chijis, and a daughter, Miss Suzuna Huberta van der Chijis.

Dr. H. F. Woodsworth, Dean of the Literary Department of the Kwansei Gakuin, Kobe Shigai, will return to Canada via Europe on one year furlough on the S.S. Donau, the Nord-deutscher Lloyd Liner, which will sail from Kobe on Saturday.

Kikugoro Onoe, a noted Japanese actor of "Kabuki" will give his performance at Kobe Shochiku theater, commencing July 1.

Mr. Ryu Mizuno has recently returned to his native province, Kochi from Brazil after 11 years' absence. He is now actively engaged in the establishment of an overseas settlement union in Kochi prefecture by order of the state of Parana, Brazil.

The ninth concert will be given by the Musica Sacra under the leadership of Conductor Josef Laska at the Kobe Church, Shimoyamate-dori 6-chome, on Saturday at 7:30 p.m.

The Rev. Gordon K. Chapman, of the Kobe Chuo Shingakko left Kobe for Yokohama, accompanied by his son aboard the "Tsubame" at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday. They are returning to Kobe in September.

Fake Medicine Ads Exposed

Is Development Of Radio Cleansing Campaign By Columbia System

A first-hand, authoritative, and startling exposure of the proprietary medicines which American radio listeners are now being urged to buy through nation-wide radiocasting containing in some instances appeals which have been barred from the mails, has just been given to the Federal Communications Commission, says the Washington correspondent of the Science Monitor.

The development came just as the Columbia Broadcasting System has announced that it would cleanse its network of objectionable advertising, and as the Communications Commission cited 21 stations, many of them outstanding, to appear at a censure meeting next fall to show cause why their licenses should not be revoked, after carrying a program of a preparation purporting to be an onesity cure, previously cited as injurious by the Federal Trade Commission.

Information Made Public

The information was presented in public hearing at the national conference of educators and broadcasters recently called by the Communications Commission, by Dr. Arthur J. Cramp appearing officially for the American Medical Association. To back his testimony, Dr. Cramp produced phonographic transcripts of records "taken off the air" in recent weeks of programs by the manufacturers of five patent medicines, which he cited specifically by name. The transcript of his evidence is just available.

"I have not picked out those I consider the worst or best in the patent medicine field," he told the commission. "I have tried as nearly as possible to take a fair cross-section of patent medicine advertising as it goes on the air today."

Gives Impetus to Drive

The effect of Dr. Cramp's revelations is to give impetus to the Commission's reform drive, which is being spurred by protests from club-women, parents' organizations and educational groups. Dr. Cramp charged that broadcasters "are far behind newspapers and magazines" in censoring pernicious advertising, and assailed radio advertising as particularly objectionable because of its intimate character.

Dr. Cramp started his list with one product which he described as "highly alcoholic," varying from 27 per cent "to the present 18 per cent" at different times. Thirty years ago it was banned on Indian reservations because Indians "got drunk on it."

"Alcohol is a narcotic drug," Dr. Cramp said, "and sold indiscriminately to the public in the guise of 'patent medicine' it carries with it very definite dangers."

Playing on Public Fear

Dr. Cramp charged that another preparation purporting to be "a home treatment for poor digestion, heartburn, acid dyspepsia and stomach ulcers" contains essentially baking powder, bismuth subnitrate and magnesium oxide—"a combination that is put up in nonproprietary form by most of the pharmaceutical houses."

"I might interpolate at this time," Dr. Cramp added, "that there has been a terrific number of these stomach-ulcers-and-hyperacidity patent medicines on the market during the depression. The reason is not far to see.

"The depression has brought about a condition of worry in the minds of hundreds of thousands and millions and that worry has reflected itself by upset digestive condition, particularly with hyperacidity. These people have been led to believe by advertising over the radio and otherwise that they are suffering from stomach ulcer when they are not suffering from anything of the sort....."

Dr. Cramp asserted that another leading radio-advertised remedy had been the subject of action by federal and drug officials "in at least 16 cases," in some cases because it "contained filthy, decomposed and putrid substances," and in some cases because of claims that it was curative—"claims," he asserted, "that were declared in court to be false and fraudulent."

The chief ingredients, he charged, were the "horse salts" of the veterinarian. He asserted—

"They should be classed among the habit-forming drugs, for there is no question but that they are responsible for a large proportion of cases of cathartic habit. . . ."

Dr. Cramp appeared at the hearing with Dr. W. W. Bauer, who also spoke in behalf of the American Medical Association.

In conclusion he said:

"The preparations that have been specifically dealt with are by no means the most objectionable of the 'patent medicines' that are advertised over the radio. They are purposely picked out because they seemed to be a fair cross-section of 'patent medicine' broadcasting and by no means the most pernicious examples.

Air Doubly Dangerous

"Radio advertising of 'patent medicines' is more objectionable than newspaper advertising of the same products. Many newspapers, as a matter of enlightened self-interest, have developed certain standards of decency and censorship that keep out of their pages the advertisements of many products of this character.

"Further, the public has, through several generations, developed a defense mechanism against the printed word and is much less likely to be carried away by false or fraudulent claims made in cold type than it is when similar claims are made verbally by a plausible-radio announcer.

"Then too, claims that are to be made in a printed form have a permanency that causes the makers to be much more cautious than when they are to have the ephemeral character of a radio broadcast.

"It is also to be remembered that impressionable young people do not, as a rule, read 'patent medicine' advertisements in newspapers or magazines. These same people can hardly avoid listening to the 'patent medicine' ballyhoo that comes into their homes over the radio."

Submarine Escape Buoy Invented By Spaniard

Claimed by the inventor, Don Cosme Salomo, to be the only efficient device of its kind, a model of a 2½-ton unsubmersible buoy for saving the crews of wrecked submarines in five minutes, has been offered to the Spanish Ministry of Marine.

The buoy is made of steel and fits snugly into the hull or deck of the submarine.

In case of an accident, the crew enter the buoy, which can be made to fit any number of men.

The buoy is worked by a double screw which also serves to hold the outer and inner walls together and is perpendicular, protruding in to the interior of the submarine through the spex of the buoy, according to a recent Christian Science Monitor report. By means of this screw, the outer wall can be lowered sufficiently to allow the space between the outer and inner walls to be filled with water.

The second of the two wheels crowning the screw axle is then turned, the inner shell brought down and hermetically sealed to the outer wall where both join the roof, and the buoy, made buoyant, slowly rises to the surface. A device called the "crown" prevents it from being projected into space.

Ministry of Marine experts were present when Senor Salomo put a model submarine through all the necessary tests.

It is planned for the buoys to be equipped with rocket signals, an oxygen tube, wireless, water, and provisions for 15 men.

Don Cosme Salomo, who is a 36-year-old Mataro (Barcelona) businessman and engineer and who is licensed as a civil air pilot, as a member of the Spanish Red Cross has devoted his attention particularly to life saving devices.

Ambition Realized

Editor's Son: "Did you ever have a great ambition when you were a boy my age?"

Editor: "Certainly. My one wish was to wear long pants. I got my wish, because, if there is anyone else in this county that wears his pants longer than I do, I'd like to meet him."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Hand-Made Island

Just off the shore in Lake Erie near Sandusky, Ohio, is a curious island, and its "growth" is as strange as the growth of any coral island of the South Seas. Kafralu Island, as it is known, is man-made.

About 25 years ago Louis Wagner, of Sandusky, ran upon a sandbar in a small boat and was grounded. And while there he had an idea—to build an island on that spot. He marked the spot with a stake and later placed planking over the bar in such a way that the shifting sands of the lake gradually built up an island large enough for a house. Then by adding a few boat loads of chips and shavings from Sandusky, the sand deposit became heavier, until today the island is spacious enough for the 12 buildings and many trees that form its skyline.

New York To Chicago By Trolley

Many years ago, during the heyday of the trolley car, J. S. Moulton, of the Interborough Rapid Transit Co. of New York, decided to try a trip from New York to Chicago by trolley, and he did it. His actual traveling time was 45 hours and 25 minutes, and the elapsed time 3 days 21 hours. The trip over this tortuous route covered 1,143 miles, and he had to take 956 different trolley cars, paying a total fare of $19.67.

Hoover Is A Republican Candidate For President

campaign between Democrats and Republicans, between the "ins" and the "outs," between the office-holders and the office-wishers. If it seemed to them good politics, they would compromise with the New Deal, adopt some of it. Or, if it seemed better politics, they would denounce the New Deal wholly. Their course, both about platform and candidate, would be dictated wholy by practical politics.

How May He Serve Best?

The existence of this point-of-view among some Republican leaders has a bearing on what Mr. Hoover should do. If Mr. Hoover should renounce public life forever, would that act make him more potent, or less potent, to influence what the Republican party will do next year? Would it enable him the better to control the party and bring about a good nomination and make the campaign what it ought to be? Or would renunciation by Mr. Hoover leave the more narrowly political of the party leaders freer to nominate a colorless mediocre candidate and make the campaign an ordinary one, without supreme emphasis on the principle involved?

It may be that Mr. Hoover ought not to be the nominee next year—but it may also be that it would be unwise for him to say so now.

Must Raise Campaign Level

The real question, for Mr. Hoover and the country, is what course on his part would make him the most potent to make next year's campaign a lofty and clear-cut comparison and contrast between the school of thought of which Mr. Hoover is the leading exponent and symbol, and, on the other hand, the school of thought of which the New Deal is the symbol and the working mechanism. That Mr. Hoover should follow whatever course is best calculated to bring about this sort of campaign—that Mr. Hoover should do this, and will, goes without saying. The condition is such, the choice between principles before America next year is such, that no personal consideration can outweigh it.

Other than Mr. Hoover, the Republican material of Grade A rank are the two justices of the Supreme Court, Mr. Stone and Mr. Roberts. Both are of high Presidential caliber. Consideration of them must necessarily include consideration of whether it is desirable to go to the Supreme Bench for a Presidential candidate; It has been done before; in 1916 the Republicans nominated Mr. Charles E. Hughes, who was then a Justice in the Court.

About the Republican material in the Group B. category, the half-dozen or dozen Republican Governors, Senators and the Congressmen occasionally mentioned, one can only say that perhaps one or more of them might make good candidates, and, if elected, good Presidents. As to most of them, not enough is known to permit judgment.

Incidentally, a name occasionally suggested by some wise persons is that of Charles A. Lindbergh.

study of the life histories of 1000 male patients admitted to the hospital because of alcoholism.

Of the group thirty-even were found to have been spoiled, pampered and over-protected by their mothers. Dr. Wall added that 35 of the 100 were men of accomplishment. 71 had one or more relatives who used alcohol to excess, and 12 were psychopathic personalities.

New use of a drug called hematoporphyrin, experimented with first in 1916 as a stimulant to mental patient suffering from severe depression was described by Dr. Leslie . Angus, senior psychiatrist of the Neuro-Psychiatric Institute and Hospital at Hartford.

The drug, an extract from the red blood cells of horses, was administered to thirty-six individuals who were not improving under other treatment. Within two weeks eighteen were partially or completely recovered, the remainder did not respond to the treatment.

Physicians are more likely to commit suicide or die from some of the very disease they treat than the average person, according to Dr. Donald Gregg of Wellesley, Mass.

In a study of 600,000 deaths among doctors, among citizens of Massachusetts, and among patients in Massachusetts State hospitals over fifteen years, he said that the incidence of death among physicians from certain diseases was greater than among the other two groups.

"Few will gainsay the view that, with his greater knowledge of the lethal possibilities of disease, the doctor when sick carries a heavier emotional load than the layman," Dr. Gregg said.

"The prevalence of suicide among physicians perhaps is due to the materialistic philosophy held by many doctors," he added.

Prescribing for his fellow-physicians, Dr. Gregg said that "to mitigate our dilemma we must lessen our emotional load by avoiding excess of emotional stimuli, by slackening our pace, or bearing it intermittently; by avoiding excessive specialization, and by developing our knowledge of facts and wisdom in applying these facts."

Big Fees In Sight For Senator Long

His Engagement As Special Counsel To Various Louisiana Boards Is Revealed

Senator Huey P. Long stands to make hundreds of thousands of dollars as special legal representative of Louisiana State boards which he controls.

The Senator, when a candidate for Governor in the Fall of 1927, denounced the then Governor, whose highway commission had paid a special attorney $25,000 in fees over a year and a half, states the New York Times. At that time he declared that when he took charge of State affairs he would require all of the State's legal business to be done by the Attorney-General's office at no additional cost to the taxpayers.

While special attorneys by the dozen have been employed in various State departments since Mr. Long became Governor in 1928, and such employment has continued under his dictatorship of the State's affairs since he relinquished the Governor's office for a Senate seat in 1932, it was not until December, 1935, that the Senator's own name appeared on record as paid attorney for any State board.

At that time, under the provisions of a Long-sponsored act passed by the October, 1934, special session of the Legislature, giving the Public Service Commission authority to assess public utilities investigated by the commission with the costs of the investigation, including attorneys' fees, the commission announced the beginning of a series of rate inquiries.

Counsel for the Commission

Simultaneously it announced that Senator Long had been employed as counsel for the commission, all three members of which had been elected on the Long ticket.

Since December, utilities have paid in these investigation assessments a total of $65,000, and Senator Long now has in the courts a demand for additional $20,000 from the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, which is fighting an order of the commission reducing its rates in the State.

Shortly after the rate inquiries were begun, the Legislature held another special session at Mr. Long's behest. During this session the Senator had a bill passed which permits the Governor and the Attorney General to employ attorneys to represent the State in controversies relating to tax recoveries or the title to lands claimed by the State.

The Governor and the Attorney-General were authorized to enter into contracts with attorneys, fixing the compensation of counsel at a percentage of the recovery.

One-Third of the Recovery

It has just been disclosed that, under this act, the tax commission, the Governor, the Attorney-General and Mr. Long entered into an agreement Feb. 3 whereby Mr. Long was to get one-third "of the amounts which he can recover for the State and its taxing subdivisions" on account of omissions in assessments and erroneous assessments. Mr. Long was to pay the expenses out of his one-third.

Peyton R. Sandoz, a former Assistant Attorney General under a previous administration, has been associated with the Senator in State bureau practice, and Representative J. Porter Burgess, who was chairman of Mr. Long's "Louisiana Tax Reform Commission," has been engaged as an accountant, to be in charge of the accountancy phase of the investigations.

Demands have been made on three lumber companies for back taxes. If Senator Long and his two assistants are able to collect from the companies they will receive about $215,000 for their share.

They have, according to their contracts with the tax commission, the whole range of property assessments for the past three years.

best customers, and the free market rate, used mostly by Argentina's secondary customers to about 20 per cent from the 14 per cent to which it had fallen.

Official Argentine government trade figures for the first quarter of the year revealed that, although the United States increased sales here by 20 per cent to reach $10,400,000 for the quarter, the United States also increased purchases by 50 per cent to reach $10,900,000 for the quarter. Thus the United States, with a slightly unfavorable balance, entered the list of Argentina's "good" customers.

Increased American sales in Buenos Aires were caused by a rise in purchases of automobiles, farm machinery and farm machinery parts, which Argentina long has been needing to replace machinery which wore out during the depression.

The increased Argentine sales in the United States were a result of the drought and unusually heavy exports of Argentine feed grains and canned meats.

Social and Personal Notes

NOTED AUTHOR DIES

The literary world of Japan is bereaved at the sudden death at 10 a.m. Saturday of Mr. Itsuma Maki, noted author, who died at his home, Yukinoshita, Kamakura.

Mr. Maki's real name was Umitaro Hasegawa. He was born in January, 1902, in Hakodate, Hokaido, the heir of Mr. Yoshio Hasegawa, president of the Hakodate Shinbun. After being graduated from the primary and middle schools of Hakodate, he went to America and studied at Oberlin College, Ohio, and at Northwestern University Chicago.

Upon his return Japan in 1926, he made a name for himself in the literary world as the author of popular stories and novels.

In the last year of his life, his interest turned to play writing. Friday morning just 24 hours before his death, he sent an unfinished play, "The Mystery of the City," a scenario for the P.C.L. pictures, to the editorial department of the Hinode. Funeral services will be arranged upon the arrival of his father, Mr. Hasegawa, at Kamakura.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENTS PARTY

A cormorant fishing party will be given next Sunday on the River Nagara, Gifu prefecture, for foreign correspondents now resident in Tokyo.

The hosts will be the Board of Tourist Industry of the Railway Ministry and the Information Bureau of the Foreign Office.

The party will leave Tokyo Station at 8:50 a.m. Sunday, arriving at Nagoya station at 2:07 p.m. A visit to the famous Nagoya castle will be made before the party leaves at 5:10 p.m. for Gifu. The cormorant fishing will take place on the river Nagara the same evening. The party will stay at the Nagara hotel in Gifu city that evening, leaving for Tokyo at 6:38 a.m. Monday.

According to acceptances at present, about 20 correspondents will enjoy the trip.

SEAMEN'S CLUB

The entertainment arranged for the Seamen by the Port Chaplain, the Rev Bernard Briggs, in conjunction with the Ladies Committee, on Friday evening at the Seamen's Club, Yokohama, resulted in a very pleasant social evening for all. The entertainment was made possible by the kind offer of the Yokohama orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. D. Miller, to provide the music. The enthusiastic applause from the large number present showed how much their skill was appreciated. During the intervals in the musical program Cinema films were shown by the Padre, the apparatus and films being very kindly loaned by Mr. P. Joyce. The enthusiastic 'three cheers' for the Ladies also showed clearly how much their part in the proceedings was appreciated.

STATUE OF HEARN

A bronze statue of the late Mr. Lafcadio Hearn, or Koizumi Yagumo, who spent the greater part of his life in writing stories introducing Japanese traditions and legends to Europe and America, was unveiled at the Imperial Liberary at Ueno, today. The statue was erected in accordance with the will of a young man Eiichi Doi, the only son of Mr. Bansui Doi, famous Japanese poet, who died at the age of 25 two years ago.

The initiative was taken by Mr. Bansui Doi, with the cooperation of Dr. Sanki Ichikawa, Professor of the Tokyo Imperial University, and other prominent scholars.

The unveiling ceremony was held at 10 a.m. today and was attended by a number of dignitaries representing various walks of life.

NURSE IS REWARDED

Mrs. Shikako Morishita, 61, head nurse of the Japan Red Cross hospital, will be awarded an order of Florence Nightingale, the highest one for a nurse, at a ceremony scheduled at 3 p.m. today, at the Red Cross hospital, at Takagi-cho, Aoyama.

Mrs. Morishita has served at the Japan Red Cross hospital for 33 years. On the occasion of the Japan-Russian War and the Siberian Incident, she was despatched to Manchuria to attend the sick and wounded soldiers.

She is the thirteenth Japanese to be awarded the Nightingale order.

EMPRESS ARRIVED

The Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Russia sailed from Hongkong on Friday, and is expected to arrive at Yokohama via Shanghai, Nagasaki, Kobe and Shimidzu on Friday, July 5, and will sail from Yokohama for Vancouver via Victoria on Saturday, July 6 at 3 p.m.

MORAES HONORED

The 7th anniversary of the death of Wenceslau de Moraes, known as the "Second Lafcadio Hearn," who devoted his late years to the promotion of cultural relations between Japan and Portugal, settling at the city of Tokushima, Shikoku, with his Japanese wife, was held today at Tokushima.

The Foreign Ministry, it is reported, sent Mr. Akio Kasama, Japanese Minister to Portugal, who is here on furlough, to the ceremony. Reports received by the Foreign Ministry from the Japanese Charge d'Affaires to Portugal, Mr. Taneki Kumabe, state that Mr. Caieira da Mata and Mr. E. Tamagnini, Foreign and Education Ministers respectively of the Portuguese Government, were to send cable messages to the memorial ceremony.

It is also reported that upon receipt of news of the projected seventh anniversary for the Late Portuguese cultural envoy, in Japan, newspapers in Portugal paid unanimous tributes of praise to the eminent services rendered by the late Mr. de Moraes for the promotion of Japan-Portuguese cultural relations.

N.B.R. MEETINGS

The usual three meetings will be held this week under the auspices of the international department of the Japan Cultural Federation (Nippon Bunka Remmei) at its forum in the New Osaka building in Uchisaiwai-cho on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday. The Tuesday meeting, from 10 o'clock until noon, will consist of a flower arrangement demonstration by Mrs. Nyosui Oshikawa, interpreted by Mrs. Hazel Gorham. At the meeting on Thursday, July 4, from 5 to 7 o'clock in the evening, Professor Toyoo Ogushi, a member of the Government Research Institute of National Culture, will lecture on the subject Problems of Japanese State Philosophy. His lecture will be in German. On Friday, July 5, there will be a meeting from 5 to 7 o'clock at which Professor Jikichiro Kawahara of the Chuo University will lecture in English on the subject The New Japan. All interested are invited to attend the meetings, for which there is no admission charge.

ART AUCTION

The art collection of Mr. K. Kumai will be shown and auctioned by the Kyoraku Art Club, at its club-house at Sukiyabashi, Ginza, from July 2 to 4. The collection contains lots of Japanese curios and old paintings.

MISS DOWD MARRIED

Miss Dorothy Dowd became the bride of Mr. Francis H. Culpin at a beautiful church wedding at Christ Church, Yokohama at 2 p.m. Saturday.

The bride's gown, a Chanel model, was of white lace trimmed with tulle ruffles and her veil of white Belgian lace fell from a cap that was held in place by rosettes of orange blossoms at each side. She carried Aryum lilies and her only jewelry was a pearl necklace, gift of the groom.

Miss Dowd entered the church on the arm of her brother-in-law, Mr. H. Geary Gardiner. Her only attendant was Miss E. C. Moss, maid of honor, who wore pale yellow organdy. Mr. Culpin was attended by Mr. K. J. Brown and ushers were the Messrs. Thomas P. Davis, Jr., H. Woodfield, A. E. Hedges, J. F. M. Bland, and H. H. Thomas.

The Right Rev. Charles Reifsnider, Suffragam Bishop of Tokyo, assisted by the Rev. E. G. Bucknill of Christ Church, officiated at the ceremony.

Following the wedding, a reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. H. Druitt in the Rising Sun Compound.

The bride is the daughter of the late Colonel and Mrs. W. S. Dowd, her father having been formerly connected with the American Embassy in Tokyo. Mr. Culpin is the son of Captain and Mrs. H. Culpin of Gloucester, and is a graduate of Cambridge. Mr. Culpin came to Japan in 1929, was stationed for some time in Sendai and in Korea and has been in the Yokohama office of his company since 1933. Following their honeymoon trip to Manila the young couple will be at home in one of the houses of the Rising Sun Compound.

MISS EYMARD MARRIED

Miss Lucette Marie Eymard and Mr. George Audolph Fachtmann were married at a quiet ceremony at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Yokohama, Saturday afternoon by the Rev. Father Leo Ward. Only immediate friends and relatives were present.

Following the ceremony, a brilliant reception was held at the home of the bride's father, Mr. Charles Eymard, for more than 250 guests. Miss Eymard was becomingly gowned in pale hue chiffon and lace fashioned after a Chancel model with puffed sleeves and a long flowing, graceful skirts. A corsage of pale blue artificial roses trimmed the gown at the waistline and a picture hat of blue completed the bride's costume. Her only jewelry was a silver chain with a pearl and diamond pendant, gift of the groom.

The bride's going away costume was a printed crepe dress, a beige jacket and a leghorn hat trimmed with brown velvet ribbon.

MISS HAYWARD IS BRIDE

Miss Florence Hayward became the bride of Mr. Bruce King Carpenter at Christ Church, Yokohama, at 5:30 p.m. Saturday.

The Rev. E. G. Bucknill performed the ceremony and the bride was given away by her mother who was gowned in wine colored chiffon over silver lame. Her attractive costume was set off by a black leghorn straw hat with mauve flowers.

Mrs. H. J. D. Rooke was matron of honor. Her gown was pale pink chiffon with hat to match and she carried an arm bouquet of pale yellow roses. Mr. Carl Gabrielson was best man.

The bride's gown was white satin crepe with a tulle veil caught at the back of the head by orange blossom buds. She carried pale pink rosebuds.

shotguns or rifles having a barrel of less than eighteen inches in length, or machine guns. The length of barrel is mentioned because firearms of less size could be concealed upon the person.

The national firearms act provides that a heavy tax shall be paid for the interestate transference of each firearm, in addition to any import duty imposed upon it. It is unlawful for any person to transfer a firearm without a written order from the person seeking it or on an application form issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The order must identify the applicant, if he is an individual, with fingerprints and a photograph.

Importation Strictly Guarded

Within sixty days after the effective date of the act every person possessing firearms of this classification was compelled by law to register with the collector of the district within which he resides the number and other marks identifying the weapon, as well as his name, address and place of business. The obliteration or removal of identification is deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction.

No firearm is to be imported into the Unitd States unless its purpose is shown to be lawful, or unless it is shown such firearm is unique and cannot be obtained within the United States. It is made unlawful to import fraudulently firearms into the United States, or to receive, conceal, buy, sell or transport such arms.

Stronger Federal Action Asked

Still many critics of the arms control problem feel that the Federal government must go even farther to stop the flow of small arms across state lines. The express or freight delivery of arms often has been condemned. Unscrupulous dealers and pawnbrokers in New York sell to gangsters and evade the law by forwarding the purchase to an address in New Jersey or another near-by state. Hundreds of such deals are made annually.

Criminologists believe that not only would the criminal be thwarted if he could not get his chief stock in trade, the weapon, but that the so-called crimes of passion would be to a large extent curbed if the purchase and sale of firearms were made more difficult. They feel that the laws could be so devised that the man who needs a gun for protection in his business, or for sport, need not be deprived of it.

Fight Restrictions, Hoover Declares

He Warns Drake Class To Suspect Any Plan That Limits Opportunities

Former President Herbert Hoover told the members of the Drake University graduating class recently that they were entering life "at one of the most crucial periods of American history since the Civil War." The question was, he said, "Will government permit you to breathe the pure air of liberty in the spirit of the Bill of Rights?"

This "pure air of liberty" he suggested in a picture of Iowa as he saw it "through the eyes of a ten-year-old boy," says the New York Times.

"My first ten years were spent in a blacksmith shop and on a farm," he related. "The vision I have of Iowa life at that time is of work in the barns and in the fields, but tempered with glorious adventure and magnificent undertakings in the woods and streams. It is a vision of people earnest in the day's work, of superlative kindness, of good humor, of good fellowship; of a people who could take hardship on the chin. They were a people of glorious faith in their own right arms, in America, and in God."

Warns Against Restrictions

Making the commencement address before an audience of 3,500 persons, the former President warned the class to be suspicious of "any proposal that asks you to forego the rightful exercise of your muscles or might, of any governmental action which limits your opportunities to work and produce," of those who would restrict "open competition."

"I hear much lament over the outlook for graduating students. Did it ever occur to you that all the people who now live in these houses, who conduct this vast complex of life and civilization are going to die? And that just as sure as death, you will take over their jobs?"

"I am troubled with just one thing," he went on. "That is what the forces of government may impose on you that will limit or destroy your inspirations, your incentives and your opportunities.

"Some people would like to mobilize you into a political bureaucracy to run this civilization.

Says Opportunities Remain

"But some of us hold that jobs should go to those who win them fairly by merit.

"The exponents of the new social order would dim some of your hopes by telling you that hope, new adventure and new opportunity have departed.

"I do not agree to that.

"Such assertions are an assumption that you will have no intelligence, no engergy, no ambitions, no new ideas and no new inventions.

"The frontiers of science, invention, the possibilities of human intelligence and human betterment as yet are but barely penetrated by men.

"There are vast continents awaiting, of thought, of research, of discovery, of human relations, potentially more prolific of human comfort and human happiness than even the 'boundless West.' My advice is not to 'go West, young man,' but to stay right here in Iowa and take your chances.

"Our forebears who settled this State inherited little from their forebears but a covered wagon, the sod, their character, their religion, self-government and the freedoms enumerated in the Bill of Rights.

Hits "Pseudo-intellectuals"

"Those hard-working, God-fearing people broke this sod and their children builded the great Commonwealth of Iowa. Today that prairie is studed with thousands of farms with their homes and buildings; the State teems with vast herds of cattle and swine, railroads, great highways, villages, magnificent cities, stores, great factories, libraries, banks, schools and universities, daily papers, public buildings and parks, automobiles, radios, bands, orchestras and a thousand other conveniences and noises.

"You are going to start life with all this plant and equipment. You get this superlative increase in inheritance. And it is a rich and good inheritance despite the sneers of pseudo-intellectuals whose wit is not tempered by understanding.

"These God-fearing people building this State under freedom, not under a political bureaucracy that coded their daily actions, limited the products of their factories and their farms, that told them they could or could not start a new enterprise. They fought the enemies of freedom from both the right and the left.

"Sons and daughters of Iowa like a world where there are chances to win on their own abilities and their own honest endeavors. They do not seek a sheltered life, relieved alike of hazard and hope.

"It is true old age and misfortune deserve protection and that the hunting fear of poverty should be driven from among us.

"It may be that there are some who, fearing competition in life, wish for assurance from government as a routine job where they advance by political favor or seniority and get a pension at the end. There are some who really need that sheltered life and should have it.

"But that sort of people did not make Iowa or make America. And they don't know and never will understand that the real abundant life comes from matching one's wits, one's character, and one's skill with his fellows.

"Do not misunderstand that I am no advocate of the right to defraud or destroy or exploit.

"There is no joy in that and the jail should be held open for those individuals so occupied."

In his description of the Iowa of his boyhood, Mr. Hoover traced the economic order of the day.

Farm Was "a Fctory"

"The farm in Cedar County," he said, "had reached that stage in agricultural history when it was not only a farm but all kinds of a factory.

"Here the family performed all the functions of a Chicago packer, a Duluth carpet factory and a California canner. Today all such things come to the front door wrapped in cellophane.

"They were their own lawyers, labor leaders, engineers, doctors, tailors, dressmakers and beauty parlor artists. They developed high art in feathers and wax.

"Sickness was greater and death came sooner. On the other hand, all the entire executive, financial, technical and labor jobs in their lives were held in the family.

"That economic system avoided strikes, lockouts, industrial clash, class conflicts, labor boards, arbitration. It even denied conciliation to small boys. The prevailing rate for picking potato bugs was 1 cent a hundred, and if you wanted firecrackers on the Fourth of July you took it or left it.

"If that wage still prevails it ought now to be adjusted to the commodity dollar and is entitled to a hearing by the Labor Board."

At the conclusion of his address, Mr. Hoover received a doctor of laws degree from the university.

Experts Studying Security Problem

Non-Govt. Representatives Of 25 Countries Assemble In London

The very live subject of "Collective Security" is being threshed out by non-governmental experts from some 25 countries who have assembled in London for the Elgth International Studies Conference which opened there on June 3.

The meeting opened with an address of welcome by Sir Austen Chamberlain, former British Foreign Secretary, who reminded the delegates that if the world missed the opportunity to devise a system of security, war will come again says the Christian Science Monitor. He divided wars into two categories: Firstly, the unpremeditated, which arise because nations reluctantly can see no other way out; secondly, the deliberate, which are due to some nation being determined to have its own way, regardless of consequences.

The League is invaluable for handling unpremeditated disputes, Sir Austen said. Present conference, however, is concerned mainly with the second category.

"Nothing but the certainty that forces will be massed against the aggressor which he cannot possibly hope to overcome will prevent this kind of war," he declared.

He urged regional pacts as a useful means of security in this connection.

To Clear Doubts

After Sir Austen Chamberlain came Prof. Maurice Bourquin, professor of jurisprudence in the University of Brussels and rapporteur on the subject of Collective Security. Professor Bourquin has had the strenuous task of comparing the voluminous and very divergetn views which have been sent to him in advance by the various international and national groups and individuals.

Armed with this material, Professor Bourquin pointed out that the task before the conference is not to reach a decision but to place on record and collate the views of delegates. He felt sure the result of their deliberations would dispel misunderstandings and that they would separate with the feeling that they had thrown light on the problem which torments this age.

Shortsightedness

Professor Bourquin was followed by Mr. Allen W. Dulles of the Council of Foreign Relations, who is chairman of the Study Meetings on Collective Security.

Mr. Dulles declared that those who wish to scrap the League, the Kellogg Pact and other treaties are taking a shortsighted view of history.

It is impossible to build up a peace system in a decade and a half after so many centuries of war, Mr. Dulles said.

Collective security, Mr. Dulles held, is in a form of insurance. Every nation's contribution should be on the basis of enlightened self-interest, he went on. Each country must decide the method of taking out this insurance and the amount of its contribution, but no country can safely disregard the problem or find salvation in isolation.

Pile of Documents

Surprising energy was shown by the various groups in preparing written material for the conference. Prior to the date of the meeting a pile of documents several feet high had already accumulated for the delegates to peruse. According to the agenda, the treatises were divided into two main streams—collective security, first as an abstract idea and then as the basis of a practical method for the organization of peace. The discussion during this current week of meeting are to follow similar lines.

The theoretic consideration of the subject covers such matters as the historical evolution of the notion of collective security. The idea itself is being examined in its political, historical and moral aspects and an attempt is being made to pin the elusive term "collective security" down and give it a precise definition.

In the sphere of possible action, the conference is discussing three main questions—the prohibition of recourse to the use of force, prevention of war and repression of war. Questions two and three have been split into several subdivisions each of which provides abundant scope for controversy and discussion.

War Prevention

Thus under the heading of war prevention, there are being considered means (other than war) of ensuring the progress of law and respect for justice; means of ensuring the maintenance of peace in cases of threat of war; peaceful settlement of disputes; reduction and limitation of armaments; respect for international agreements; revision of treaties and international situations.

In regard to war repression, the conference is examining that venerable problem: how to determine an aggressor. The subject of neutrality in its relation to a system which provides for the repression of recourse to war is another sub-division. Finally there is consideration of measures of mutual assistance and "sanctions" coupled with regional agreements.

Altogether, the delegates thus have an agenda which covers the whole gamut of topics which have exercized the thought of diplomats and statesmen throughout the post-war series of attempts to organize peace. The current conference hopes to discuss these questions from a more detached angle than governments have been able to do. In this way, it feels it may be able to give a useful lead for statesmen to follow.

This week's conference was convened by the League of Nations' International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation with the British Coordinating Committee as hosts. The gathering includes delegates from five international and 14 national institutions as regular members of the Studies Conference organization. A number of non-member national and international bodies have also sent delegates by invitation.

Roosevelt Lauds Boy Scout Record

President Sends Message To National Council In Session At Chicago

The "splendid record of achievement" of the Boy Scouts of America, now 1,823,810 strong, was praised in a letter from President Roosevelt read to 500 Scout leaders at the annual meeting of the National Council held in Chicago recently.

The letter from President Roosevelt, who is honorary president of the Boy Scouts, read in part:

"We can all rejoice because of the splendid record of achievement of our organization in the last twenty-five years. The fact that we are now reaching individually in excess of a million boys each year is encouraging.

"It is a splendid tribute to the manhood of our country that 2,75,000 men enrolled for volunteer service in 1934. These men, and especially those who serve as Scout masters, are entitled to our very real gratitude for what is being done in the way of character building and citizenship training."

Business and professional men from all the States heard Dr. James E. West, chief Scout executive, report that 1934 was the most successful year in the history of the organization, according to the New York Times. The increase was noted in all branches of Scout work.

The "Cubbers," younger brothers of the Scouts and other boys too young to enter Scout ranks, boast a membership of 115,122, five years after the organization was established, Dr. West said.

The treasurer, Louis Gawtry, reported that it cost $860,173.76, or about 65 cents a boy, to operate the Scout organization, while the income was $879,131.76.

Former Governor R. A. Nestos of North Dakota, speaking at a luncheon of the organization delegates, urged the extension of the rural Scout program.

"When we consider the spirit of the present age, we must confess that the boyhood of America needs the best that scouting can contribute of character training and leadership development," he said.

Daniel Carter Beard of Suffern, N. Y., National Scout Commissioner, recounted the dramatic stories of deeds which won the gold medal of honor for twenty-one boys, and certificates of heroism for forty-one others.

A NEW NOVEL
"Pilot And Shogun"
The Strange Story Of Will Adams (Miura Anjin), A Contemporary Of Shakespeare, Who Won The Confidence Of Tokugawa Iyeyasu
By JAMES A. B. SCHERER
Author of "Japan's Advance", "The Romance of Japan", etc.
The Ship in Which Will Adams reached Japan in 1600
Dr. Scherer's presentation of "Miura Anjin" as a Japanese samurai is thrilling, and his portraiture of that bygone time has the ring of truth. His romance is real history, and I find it far superior to any historical novel of recent years. For he knows the Old Japan at first hand, and has absorbed its atmosphere. TO INSPECT FLOODS

Mr. Tomoyuki Hisayama, member of the Seiyukai, and Mr. Toyokichi Toyoda, member of the Minseito, left Tokyo today to inspect the damage caused by the floods in Kansai.

AT CANADIAN LEGATION

Sir Herbert and Lady Marler were at home on Dominion Day, July 1, to the Canadian residents of Tokyo. The tea-table in the banquet room with its cool arrangement of pink gladiolas in a shallow green bowl was the center of attraction.

The grassy terraces of the legation were at their best, here and there bright touches of hollyhocks and hyderangias against the screen of old trees. The guests enjoyed the walks through the trees and clustered in groups on the lawns.

Sir Herbert and Lady Marler will leave for Karuizawa to spend the summer in the mountain resort, but the date of their departure has not yet been fixed.

DRIVE YOURSELF CLUB

The Japan Automobile club will open its summer headquarters at the Mampei Hotel in Karuizawa on July 10 and continue to the beginning of September. Baby Datsun cars will be rented to the members of the club.

LEAVES FOR CHOSEN

Mr. Kenneth Kirkwood of the Canadian Legation left today for a month's holiday in Chosen where he will climb the Diamond Mountains and visit Canadian missions.

FIREWORKS DISPLAY

There was a fireworks display on the Rokugo River, the lower stream of the Tama River on Monday evening which was attended by 100,000 persons.

The banks of the river were crowded with people until a late hour, to enjoy the fireworks and the cool of the evening. Not for a long time has the Rokugo River presented such a gay sight.

DR. OGUSHI TO SPEAK

Dr. T. Ogushi will speak in German at the 157th meeting of the Nippon Cultural Federation (Nippon Bunka Renmei) on Thursday at 5 p.m. His subject will be "Some Problems of State Philosophy." The forum of the federation will be held in room 452 in the New Osaka Building, Uchisaiwai-cho.

BUSINESS TRIP

Mr. Y. Fukukita, president of Phi Beta Kappa in Japan, who left for Vancouver in April on a business trip for his company, Oji Seisha Kaisha, has returned to Tokyo. He spent two months in British Columbia and a short time in the United States.

YC-AC MOVIE SHOWS

Commencing next Wednesday, July 3, the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club will hold weekly cinema shows every Wednesday evening instead of on Sundays, as formerly. These mid-weekly shows will commence with a special program, including "Man's Castle," a Columbia picture featuring Spencer Tracy and Loretta Young.

Columbia 'Unjust,' Deutsch Declares

Brooklyn Principal Denies He Tried To Keep Anti-War Students Out Of College

Having refused to attend the Columbia University commencement exercises recently as a sign of protest against the university's treatment of six medical students, Acting Mayor Bernard S. Deutsch of New York wrote to Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the university, explaining his reasons in detail.

At the same time Dr. Gabriel R. Mason, principal of Abraham Lincoln High School in Brooklyn, denied he had made it impossible for several senior students to enter various universities and colleges because of their anti-war activity. That charge had been made by the National Student League, which held that the students had been punished in that way for absenting themselves from classes on April 12 for an anti-war demonstration, says the New York Times story which follows:

Mr. Deutch wrote to Dr. Butler that he regretted his inability to take part in the commencement exercises. He said he could not share the spirit of such an occasion while the university continued "to deal high-handedly and quite unjustly" with the medical students. Six students in the College of Physicians and Surgeons had been told that they could not return to school next year after they had planned an anti-war meeting in one of the school lecture halls.

Cites Butler's Peace Prize

The Acting Mayor in his letter reviewed his conference with five of the students at City Hall and said in part:

"I learned, with the greatest dismay, that these men, all holders of at least one academic degree, had been denied the right to continue their studies at Columbia because of their crusade for peace and their attendant anti-war activities, for all which I believe, on your record, you should have been the last person to favor any disciplinary measures. Certainly it is reasonable to suppose that the recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize would be expected to advance, approve, and foster such activities.

"Unless it be for the reason that the spread of anti-war propaganda is a violation of the rules of the university, there would appear to be no cause for the dismissal of the students, so far as I have been able to learn. They have repeatedly been denied a hearing by the dean and faculty and, in my opinion, ordinary justice would require that they be afforded every opportunity to state their case. For the university to deny them such an opportunity would hardly be consonant with the American traditions of fair play and common justice.

"May I, therefore, request that you personally review all of the facts and that these students be granted an opportunity to present to you their version of the activities in which they were engaged, in order that it may not be said that Columbia Univeristy wilfully heard in their own defense."

After receiving the letter yesterday Dr. Frank D. Fackenthal, university secretary, said university officials would not comment on it. He added that Dr. Butler had not read the communication. Dean Willard C. Rappleye of the Columbia Medical School, who was hissed at the commencement exercises, was out of his office and was not reached. Dr. Karl N. Llewellyn of the Columbia Law School returned affidavits to the six students which contained their charges that "big money" interests were responsible for their ouster. He said they could take legal action against the university if they wished.

Dr. Mason Answers Charges

Dr. Mason, principal of the Brooklyn high school, said he sympathized with students who honestly opposed war. He recalled that he had been a conscientious objector during the war and had advocated international peace all his life. This was not the issue involved, however, he said. His criticism of his students, he asserted, was not "personal" but rather was based on their deliberate violation of the Board of Education ruling against participation in the anti-war demonstrations last April 12.

The principal denied that he had taken particular pains to keep any of the April 12 strikers out of college. When a student applies to a college for admittance, Dr. Mason said, the college sends a questionnaire on the student's record to his high school principal.

Questions asked, Dr. Mason explained, include queries on leadership, loyalty and obedience. In filling out the blanks for those students who went out on strike, he merely noted the April 12 example of disobedience, Dr. Mason said, adding that he would be "greatly lacking in my obligations as a high school principal if I failed to do so."

He had no way of knowing, the principal added, how many colleges had turned down Abraham Lincoln seniors as a result of the formal disclosure of their act of disobedience. In some instances, he said, colleges may have overlooked the infraction.

Dr. Mason attacked the National Student League as an organization, dedicated mainly to communistic principles, that had used the anti-war argument to "take in" some Abraham Lincoln High School students on the April 12 strike. Circulars dropped around by the league prior to the strike, he said, indicated clearly that the organization was seeking to incite students against capitalism and the national, State and city governments.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

Thurston Weds Girl He Often Sawed In Two

Magician, 65, Marries Troupe Member, 27, And Couple Sail For Florida

Howard Thurston, magician, and Miss Pauline Mark, a member of his stage troupe for ten years, were married on May 24 in Harrison, N. Y., and sailed following day for a wedding trip on the Clyde-Mallory liner Shawnee. They will go to Florida.

The ceremony was performed at Harrison Town Hall by Leo Mintzer, Justice of the Peace. In the marriage license, obtained from William Wilding, Harrison Town Clerk, Mr. Thurston gave his real family name, H. Franklin Thurston, which he changed many years ago for stage purposes according to the New York Herald Tribune. He said he was sixty-five years old and described himself as "manufacturer of indispensable commodities."

Bride Is 27, Husband 65

Mrs. Thurston said she was twenty-seven, the former wife of Kenneth N. Claude and lived in North Adams, Mass.

Mr. Thurston appeared in jubilant spirits on sailing, saying that though he was sixty-five by the calendar he felt as though he were only forty. He talked enthusiastically of some Yogi secrets which he said he had picked up in India and believed would enable him to live to be a hundred.

When Thurston appeared fifteen years ago in Chicago he turned a box of candy into a white rabbit for an amazed little girl he had asked to come to the stage. He gave her the rabbit and she never forgot him.

Thurston was playing in Chicago years later and little girl of fifteen years ago came to visit him. She became his stage partner and is now his wife.

He Sawed Her in Half

Mrs. Thurston has helped her husband on the stage for several years by playing the role of the woman he apparently saws in two. She and her twin sister, Mrs. Edward Martin, of Rochester, joined the Thurston troupe together. Her sister left the stage upon her marriage three years ago.

Thurston expects to live to be a hundred years old through one of the secrets he learned from the Hindus. The secret life-lengthener involves the mentality, blood circulation and spinal column, he said mysteriously, but he refused to divulge it.

Thurston lives at the Hotel Victoria, Seventh Avenue and Firty-first Street, Jack Mano, of Flushing, Queens, a friend and stage colleague, was his best man at the ceremony in Harrison. The magician has been married twice before.

So He's Leaving

"Do you think you can keep that desperado in jail?"

"I don't know," answer Cactus Joe. "We're doin' our best. We have fired two cooks he didn't like, given him credit at the licker dispensary and subscribed for all the magazines. But somehow we don't seem able to keep him satisfied."—Montreal Daily Star.

Grouchy Boss: "Well, hurry up; what did you say?"

Office Boy: "I said I was sorry you wern't in."—American Boy.

Italy Seeking Trade Grants

Anxious To Put Relations With Ethiopia On Clear And Definite Basis

Apart from getting the menace to security of frontiers removed, Italy is anxious to put relations with Ethiopia on a clear and definite basis before the present dispute is ended, says the Rome correspondent of Christian Science Monitor.

By the tripartie treaty of 1906, Italy with France and Great Britain divided Ethiopia into economic spheres of influence. Italy has been trying for years to get Ethiopia to allow her to implement this arrangement. In 1928 Italy hoped she had at last succeeded.

A convention between the two countries provided for a motor road between Dessie and the Eritrean port of Assab. Ethiopia was to have a free zone in the port for a period of years. The two countries were to share in expenses of building the road.

Hopes Disappointed

Italy hoped for much trade to develop from this arrangement. But difficulties arose. Nothing was done. Relations deteriorated farther instead of improving.

Italy wants to develop markets in Ethiopia. She believes there is much mineral wealth in the country. Under the 1906 arrangement, France and Britain allowed Italy to build a railroad connecting Massowa in Eritrea to Mogadiscio, Italian Somaliland. But the Ethiopian Government has never accepted this plan, which was arived at without her consent. Italy is now determined there shall be no further delay.

Meanwhile, in Somaliland, Italian patrols have been pushing westward the past few years beyond the general line indicated in the Italo-Ethiopian boundary treaty of 1908. The district in question was not in effective control of the Ethiopian Government, and as the latter's hand gradualy tightened, a clash became inevitable.

Frontier Issue

Hence the Valval incident. When the frontier is finally delimited, Italy, it is believed, expects to obtain a considerable part of the Ogaden tract of territory formerly regarded as Ethiopian.

Principal aims in the present dispute, however, are generally held to be economic. Some authorities also believe there are certain districts suitable for white settlement and that Italy has an eye on these. But this is not proved. Nor is the report that Italy hopes to obtain a concession to grow cotton.

The word "war" has just been used for the first time in the Italian press in connection with the Italo-Ethiopian dispute.

The Gazeta del Popolo, Fascist newspaper at Turin, declared yesterday that if there is no other means of settling the dispute, then war will be used.

Social and Personal Notes

AT HOME ON JULY 4

The American Ambassador and Mrs. Grew will be at home to their compatriots on Independence Day, July 4, after 5 p.m. Dress will be informal.

NO RECEPTION

There will be no reception at the French Embassy on July 14th owing to the absence from Tokyo of the French Ambassador.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

According to the Tokyo Asahi, the engagement of Miss Chiyoko Sato and Mr. Henry Toshiro Shimanouchi has been announced. Miss Sato, Secretary of the International Women's and Children's Society, is well known among the foreign residents in Japan for her important part as hostess to the goodwill dolls, "Mr. and Mrs. America" on their recent visit to this country. Mr. Shimanouchi, is with the editorial department of the Japan Advertiser. He is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Ryoen Shimanouchi, vice-president of the Nichibei Shimbun of San Francisco. Mr. Takeshi Yanagisawa of the Cultural Bureau of the Foreign Office acted as go-between. The date of the wedding has not been announced.

HOLYOKE PROFESSOR TO ARRIVE

According to word received here, Dr. Mary I. Hussey, professor of Hebrew and of Comparative Religions at Mt. Holyoke College will arrive in Yokohama on July 8. Dr. Hussey will be guest of Mrs. Gressit during here stay in Tokyo. She will study Japanese and Chinese religions during her stay in the Orient.

TO SAIL FOR AMERICA

Mrs. Mary B. Baker of Pomona, California, who has been making an extended visit to Mrs. Gressitt will sail for America on the President Pierce, July 9. Mrs. Baker passed through Japan in April with the Meeally tour from Los Angeles, going as far as Manila with the party. Since then she has visited Shanghai University where she saw Breaker Hall a memorial to her father, Dr. M. J. Breaker, formerly of Kansas City and St. Louis. She has visited Sendai and the North Star Baptist church in which the bell hangs which was sent by her church, the First Baptist Church of Pomona.

LINGUIST HONORED

Mr. H. E. Palmer, linguist adviser to the Ministry of Education has been awarded the degree of Bungaku Hakushi (Doctor of the Literature) by the Tokyo Imperial University for his thesis on "Grammer of Spoken English and on English Intonation" Mr. Palmer is at present in England attending the Congress of Linguisticians, held under the auspices of the Carnegie Foundation, on problems of limited vocabulary and English as a world language.

HONGKONG VISITORS

Among the summer residents in Kamakura are Mrs. S. H. Garrod, wife of the passenger agent of the Canadian Pacific at Hongkong, accompanied by her two children. Mrs. Garrod and children will arrive at Yokohama on Friday aboard the Empress of Russia. They will spend the summer months in Kamakura.

PREMIER'S LUNCHEON

Following adjournment of the Cabinet Council on July 8, the Government will hold a luncheon at the Premier's official residence at noon to celebrate the first anniversary of the formation of the Okada Cabinet. The Ministers of State, Chief of the Cabinet Secretariat Tatsuki Shirane, Director of the Investigation Bureau Shigeru Yoshida, Chief of the Legislative Bureau Tokujiro Kanamori and Mr. Shohei Fujinuma, former Chief of the Metropolitan Police Board.

ON FURLOUGH

H. E. the Chinese Ambassador, General Chiang Tso-pin, called on Premier Okada at his official residence Tuesday to announce his impending departure on furlough.

FORMER RESIDENTS TO RETURN

Word has been received that Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Thompson who were expected to return to Japan last Friday on the Dollar liner President Hoover have been delayed. They are expected to arrive at a later date.

NEWLY WEDS RETURN

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce King Carpenter, have returned from their honeymoon and they are now occupying one of the bungalows of the Bluff Hotel, Yokohama.

MOTOR TRIP TO KARUIZAWA

A weekend motor trip to Karuizawa was taken by Mr. and Mrs. Guy de la Chevalerie, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Ronvau, Miss Vivian Schriver, Mr. Franz Weissblatt and Mr. Michel Jalenques.

TAKAYAMA NOTES

The first house in Takayama was opened July 24 by Mrs. Edinger, wife of Captain E. Duncan Edinger of Tientsin. She has with her her two children, Elizabeth and Leland. She led a lonely existence until the arrival on the 27th of a party of 14—Mrs. Squires, Mrs. Lunt with her sons, Geoffrey and Prescott, Herbert Squires, Jacqueline Terry, Bill Adams, Miss Bernice Austin, music teacher in Shanghai American school, and several others from Shanghai. Mr. and Mrs. Gressitt and Mrs. Baker were of the party but stayed only a few days in Takayama. Florence Gressitt is there. On the 28th. Mrs. Schneder and Miss Margaret Garman came out from Sendai for the week-end, and Mr. Lunt, editor of the China Digest joined his family in Mrs. Squires house and Miss Joie Budd, teacher in Shanghai, arrived at the Gressitt cottage.

NEW GRAND GUESTS

Mr. S. Wiznitzer, Mr. J. Dweek, Mr. S. France, Captain W. D. Davie, Mr. Champoud, Mr. F. S. Woodhouse, Mrs. J. C. Bertllet, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Resker, Comdr. and Mrs. Lane, Mr. T. Tuchey, Miss Jacob, Mr. R. C. Tear, Miss W. M. Hooper, Mrs. H. S. House, Mr. J. J. Landsbury, Mrs. L. P. Shimpkinson, Mrs. C. Smertenko, Mrs. A. L. Peck, and rs. R. J. Stocks.

FOURTH OF JULY

The American members of the American Club will be at home to their fellow members of other nationalities on July 4 between 12 noon and 1 p.m. Refreshments will be served to the guests.

WEDDING ANNOUNCED

The marriage of Mr. O. Gode with Miss Gerda Overbeck will take place on Friday at 1:30 p.m. at the German Church, 28 Nakarokubancho Kojimachi-ku. The ceremony will be performed by Dr. W. Gundert. After the ceremony an informal celebration with some of the closest friends will be held at the Tokyo Kaikan.

IMPERIAL HOTEL GUESTS

New arrivals at the Imperial hotel on Tuesday were:

Dr. Gruber, Baron C. Fuchs, Miss Jerry McCord, Mr. H. M. Von Bemmeler, Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Albertson, Miss Jean and Miss Barbara Albertson, Dr. and Mrs. T. R. Gammage, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice, Maurice's 2 children, Miss Esther Eiffert, Miss Katherine Gibson, Mr. J. H. L. Guarles Van Ufford, Mrs. Kay Hough, Mrs. Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. James E. Geggie, Miss S. Wilkins, Mr. Ebrahim Mahdavi, Mr. J. Pickering, Prof. O. J. Hallis, Prof. Rex Underwood and Miss L. Millot.

Many Secrets Of Stratosphere Still Unsolved By Scientists

A stratosphere flight is a scientific research expedition. It may be an adventure for those who are taking part in it, but as planned it is a definite project for obtaining a great deal of information concerning the outer regions of the earth not ordinarily accessible to man. Several visits have been made to the stratosphere.

The early trips were pioneering efforts directed largely toward showing that the trip could be made and the voyagers reach the earth again in safety, says John J. O'Neill in the New York Herald Tribune. The scientific observations made on these trips were limited, the most important being the cosmic ray work. The flight that is scheduled for this week, says the article of June 2 or as soon as weather conditions permit, in the Explorer II under the auspices of the National Georgraphic Society and the United States Army Air Corps, has on its program more than a score of scientific projects.

It is well known that more than nine-tenths of the total mass of the atmosphere lies below the levels reached by the stratosphere flights. The remaining one-tenth stretches out for 100 or perhaps 200 or more miles with rapidly decreasing density. The outer reaches of the atmosphere are little different from the almost perfect vacuum of interplanetary space.

Atmosphere Insulates Earth

This blanket of atmosphere separates the surface of the earth and its inhabitants from the conditions in outer space. What are the conditions in outer space? That is what the stratosphere flyers are going to find out. When they reached a thirteen to fourteen mile altitude, the record aimed at this year, they will have reached a realm in which the conditions are more interplanatory than terrestrial.

A human being could not live in the stratosphere unprotected. That is a foregone conclusion. There is not enough oxygen and what there is has entirely too low a pressure. There is radiation coming from the sun and stars that never breaks through the atmosphere. It is suspected that it would prove deadly to human life. The cosmic rays are vastly more intense at the top than at the bottom of the atmosphere. What happens to animal life exposed to these rays? Are persons visiting the stratosphere exposed to causes that will have profound effects later? What are the electrical conditions on the outer layers of air? Are there any forms of life in these upper layers? A few decades ago a famous scientist suggested that life came to the earth from other planets in the form of spores.

These are just a few of the problems concerning the stratosphere for which scientists want the answers and which the stratosphere flyers hope to bring back. In order to do so the car in which they make the trip will be transformed into a flying laboratory. Every nook and corner of the sphere will be filled with instruments and others will hang outside. Captain Albert W. Stevens, of the Army Air Corps, will be in command of the flight and have charge of the scientific program. Captain Orvil A. Anderson will pilot the balloon.

Study Electrical Coductivity

On the outside of the gondola will be a device for measuring the electrical conductivity of the air. Air will be drawn continuously through a chamber in which its ionization and conductivity will be determined. It is considered possible that the conductivity of the air at the thirteen-mile level will be 300 times as great as on the surface. If this is found to be so it suggests a means for distribution of electrical energy that will be as universal as the distribution of radio waves which may be sent out from one station and picked up anywhere on the earth. The super-conductivity of the stratosphere air is due to the ionization produced by ultra-violet, X-rays and cosmic rays; it is believed to carry electricity as well as metal. Nikola Tesla suggested such a system of world wide distribution of electricity a quarter of a century ago on purely hypothetical grounds. Since then measurements have been made at increasing altitudes showing increasing conductivity. This year it is hoped to get the conductivity at the thirteen and fourteen mile level. The measuring apparatus for the flight was designed by Dr. A. H. Gish of the department of terrestrial magnetism of the Carnegie Institution.

Svante Arrhenius, the Swedish astronomer, at the beginning of the century suggested that life came to the earth from other parts of the universe, traveling under the pressure of light. There was no means available for checking up the theory before the days of stratosphere flight, nor is there any way of doing it with any certainty now. Spores floating in the stratosphere will be collected and if any are found not known on the earth it will open the way for some interesting surmises. There is a more practical purpose in collecting the spores. Studies made by the Department of Agriculture have shown that spores on the lower levels in the air carry diseases of plants. Viruses produce plant as well as animal diseases, and a knowledge of how epidemics spread may be gained through a knowledge of what spores can travel and exist in the stratosphere.

Last year some spores were taken from the ground and exposed to stratosphere conditions of bright sunlight, cold and reduced pressure and when examined after the flight were found to be uninjured. Similar experiments will be made this year and in addition a tube will be dropped on a parachute through six or seven miles of stratosphere air and then automatically closed for the remainder of the flight to the earth.

Fruit flies are the lightning artists of experimental evolution. Experimental conditions to which they are subjected produce easily observed changes in bodily conditions that are passed on to descendants. A culture of fruit flies will be taken to the stratosphere and exposed to the rays of the sun before it has been filtered through the atmosphere. The results will give an indication of what physical results can be expected from these little known rays.

Spectrograms of the sun will be taken at the top of the flight, and similar records of sky light.

Many large evacuated flasks will be taken on the flight and these will be filled with air at various altitudes. A chemical analysis will be made of these samples.

To Study Earth's Reflection

While the sky becomes increasingly darker at higher altitudes, due to lack of diffusion by the thin air, the sun beocmes much brighter. At the high altitudes reached it will be possible to make measurements of the amount of light that is reflected from the earth's surface. The power of a planet to reflect light from its surface is called by astronomers its albedo. It is believed that the earth reflects about six times as much light from a unit surace as does the moon.

Cameras of accurately determined focal length designed to take pictures straight down during the course of the flight will make it possible to determine accurately the height attained and also to chart the course of the balloon.

Automatic photographically recording electroscopes will be taken along in heavy lead cases to measure the intensity of the cosmic rays. Electrical thermometers carefully shielded will be carried outside the gondola, with recording apparatus located inside. Recording barometers connected by tubes with the outside air will be carried in a variety of forms.

Radio Wave Observations

Interesting experiments will be made with radio waves of extremely high frequency such as will be used in connection with the contemplated commercial television broadcast. They are like optical waves, travel in an almost straight line and cannot be received very far beyond the visible horizon. It is though possible that when sent from the stratosphere they may reach beyond the very distant horizon that is seen from that altitude. Regular radio equipment for transmitting and receiving voice signals will be carried.

Motion picture cameras will record the receding earth and the expanding balloon, and an infra-red camera will be aimed continuously at the horizon for pictures of the curvature of the earth.

All of this equipment and more will be crowded into a spherical gondola nine feet in diameter. It is constructed of Dowmetal, a magnesium alloy lighter than aluminum, and about one-fifth of an inch thick. The balloon will be inflated with helium. The flight will be from the same Black Hill, S. D. site as last year.

Runaway Truck Stopped By Girl, 13, As Men Fail

Jean Pryce, 13 years old, of Newark N. J., was the heroine of her neighborhood recently. Winner of six certificates in athletics, at the Avon Avenue School, Jean succeeded in stopping a runaway truck after two men had failed.

The truck started to roll down the hill on Avon Avenue between Hunterdon and Bergen Streets. Two men seized the rear fenders and tried to hold it, says the New York Times. The truck gathered momentum and got away from them. Jean ran along the left side of the truck, jumped on the running board and pulled up the emergency brakes.

she says, 'Ah, well, if there is enough to bury me, that is all I can ask.'

"We may well suppose that the man addressed made the hoped for response and that the old home did not have to be sold after all. The sale of various offices in the temple is recorded, notably those of door-keeper, brewer and annointing priest. Mr. Alexander found that an office of this kind, upon the death of the holder, passed to his son.

A letter of Rim-Sin, addressed to four men, two of whom are known as important figures of that day, appears to be a decree of death on that part of the king in a case which had been appealed to him for judgment.. The body of the letter deciphered by Mr. Alexander states:

"Since they have cast a young slave into the oven, do ye cast a slave into brick kiln."

Mr. Alexander's interpretation says that it would seem that some men, whose names are not given, had burned a young slave to death by throwing him into a bake oven. The king decrees that, in retaliation, an adult slave belonging to the same men who did the deed should be cast into the brick kiln and burned.

Vitamin B-1 Found Neuritis Remedy

sult they may develop a scurvy in the gastric regions, which sometimes may lead to ulcers. Gastric ulcers from such an origin may also be relieved by the cevitamic acid.

Moreover, there are some persons who, even though they take fruits and vegetables containing vitamin C, cannot utilize the vitamin because of some digestive deficiency. In such cases the vitamin deficiency may be supplied by intravenous injections of the vitamin.

Particularly in hypertension, the high blood pressure against the blood vessels may cause one or more of these vessels to weaken and burst, resulting in possible hemorrhage or death. In such cases vitamin C has been found to strengthen the vessels and is therefore advocated as a preventive measure.

The preventive dose has been found to be from 30 to 60 milligrams a day by mouth, while the curative dose is between 60 and 150 milligrams. In severe cases from 100 to 400 milligrams are injected daily with either a normal salt water solution or with distilled sterile water.

The new treatment for chronic ulcers causde by various veins was achieved by the use of a choline compound, known as acety-letamethyl-choline. One-half of 1 per cent of this substance was prepared in a solution with water. This was saturated with asbestos and wrapped around the affected limb, without covering the ulcer itself.

The choline-saturated asbestos was connected with an electrical circuit similar to the one used in electro-plating. The positive electrode was wrapped around the asbestos, while the negative electrode was attached to some other part of the body.

The ionized choline atoms in the solution are made by the current to pass through the skin into the blood vessels surrounding the ulcer and bring a supply of healthy blood into the ulcer area. This has so far resulted in the elimination of chronic varicose veins ulcers in nine cases, it was reported.

In his experiments on mice Dr. Davidson used two groups of animals. To one group he gave an ordinary diet and then applied to their skins coal-tar substances that are known to develop cancer. The other group he fed on a diet rich in vitamin E, including wheat-germ cereal, wheat-germ oil and lettuce.

The first group of nine mice all developed cancer and died. In the second group of ten mice fed on the vitamin E diet none developed cancer.

"It would appear," Dr. Boyd said in his report today on Dr. Davidson's work, "that a diet rich in vitamin E renders mice more resistent to the carcerogenic factor in tar than does the normal diet, but Dr. Davidson is careful to point out that such a diet is also rich in vitamin B-1 and B-2.

"Whatever may be the precise factor concerned, this is apparently an example of the constitutional make-up of an animal being so altered that it becomes resistant to extrinsic carcerogenic agents. It shows that something may be done to cancer, the supreme example of freedom from restraint on growth, in the way of imposing a degree of restraint from without."

Montreal Reports A Television Gain

Inventor In N.Y., Says Images Are Almost As Distinct As Home Film Projections

Television, of a clarity almost equal to home movies, is now a reality in Montreal, according to William Hoyt Peck, New York inventor, who spent the day in New York City on business before returning to Canada to undertake the second phase of television's development in the Dominion.

The first phase, Mr. Peck said, was the experimental work in connection with the problem of selecting waves and equipment to broadcast images; the second phase will be the installation of permanent apparatus and the putting of broadcasts on a service basis.

"The first phase has been successfully accomplished," said Mr. Peck, according to the New York Times. "We are now broadcasting pictures sixteen inches square on a wave length of six meters, through the metropolitan area of Montreal. The furthest distance covered has been sixty miles. By July 1 we except to supply Ottawa with images from the Montreal station. Our present equipment is using only 100 watts of sending power, or an electric consumption equivalent to a 100-watt light bulb used throughout the city experimentally are intercepting clear images. The pictures can be viewed at a distance of ten feet from the screen."

Images Pierce Buildings

Mr. Peck believes television is no longer "around the corner," but is here today and "coming fast toward the point of nation-wide use." One of the important discoveries made in Canada, he said, was that a mile of steel buildings in the heart of a city could be pierced by six-meter waves. Another development is a special aerial system which "concentrates the energy of the pictures in desired locations, without wasting the power on undesirable sections. A third discovery, he added, was that six-meter waves, under certain conditions, seemed to penetrate hills.

"Six-meter television beams twist in the air like a corkcrew," said the inventor. "When testing to discover if pictures penetrated into certain parts of the city, behind large buildings and under bridges, a vertical pick-up rod often was totally useless for receiving purposes. Then we hit on the idea of canting the ten-foot copper-rod aerials at crazy angles. To our amazement, six-meter waves could be detected any place in the city by thus 'orienting' the metal rods at the right angle. Once found, the angle remains the same for that location and needs no further attention.

Angle of Poles Vital

"Looking at the top of almost any New York apartment house one can see dozens of antenna masts bent at every conceivable angle by the weight of the wires attached to them. Such a spectacle will greet the eye when television take on the form of a fixed service in cities. The rods that pick up the images will have to be put out in the open, and turned at angles that afford the best reception."

Call letters of the Montreal station are VE9AK. The transmitter is in the Dominion Square Building, in the heart of the city. Soon the power will be raised to 1,000 watts, Mr. Peck said, and changes in the lines will give better definition or a large increase in the size of the projected pictures.

The inventor revealed that he was working on a novel image receiving set which, in addition, will be an all-wave instrument capable of tuning in all kinds of radio programs. The driving motor for the scanning disk will be but one-hundredth of one horsepower, he said, and the scanning disk about four inches in diameter.

Three new 180-line television transmitters are now under construction in Canada for installation in Montreal, New York and London, he said.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Masonic Martyr

Major Lukasinski of Warsaw (1786-1868), while serving in the Polish Army under the command of Grand Duke Constantine, was arrested in 1822 and court-martialled for the crime of having been a member of a secret order (Masons). He was convicted and imprisoned in the Schlusselburg Fortress, the most dreaded prison in all Russia. He was lodged, a prisoner of state, in the most forbidding part of the underground dungeon. No one, not even the guards were permitted to speak to him. He was forbidden the solace of books or writing material. He never sent or received any letters. The Czar ordered his very name stricken from the records of the living. He was given an allowance of 2½ cents a day for complete maintenance, but his jailers always stole ½ cent of this allowance. Under these incredible conditions Major Lukasinski survived for 46 years, dying in his stone dungeon on February 27, 1868.

Murphy Ask Tariff Revision To Protect U.S.

Rengo

MANILA, June 2—Governor-General Frank Murphy today appealed to Filipine leaders to approve, during the current session of the Philippine legislature, a tariff revision designed to preserve approximately one half of the Philippine textile market for the United States.

It is pointed out that the projected tariff increase is designed to prevent the complete loss of the textile market for the United States, until the completion of a permanent trade relation program which would come with the establishment of the Commonwealth. Observers opine that the legislators, to date, have been apathetic toward the American plea.

Although nothing official has been said, Governor-General Murphy stressed in private that the action was not aimed at Japan. He pointed out that the Japanese would continue to hold approximately one-half of the market as compared to the one-fourth they held two years ago, and the three-fourths they hold at present. He added that the market is normally worth over $20,000,000 annually.

Observers were pessimistic as to whether the current Philippine Legislature will act before the adjournment of its session in about a month's time.

Russians Attack Too Easy Divorces

Ostracism Is Urged For Men Who Treat Marriage And Motherhood Lightly

A cry of chivalry toward women went up in the U.S.S.R. where women are so emancipated they work with pick and shovel in subway tunnels, sweep streets, drive trucks, and plow and reap in the fields, besides having equal rights in the more learned and less onerous callings.

Not the chivalry of picking up a dropped handkerchief or of offering an insulting physical "protection" as to a weaker sex, says Harold Denny in the New York Times. What is demanded is chivalry at the one point where women truly need it here—in their relationships as wives and mothers.

Children Are Avoided

Men must stop using the easy marriage and divorce laws to acquire a new wife each year, causing the women to avoid having babies for fear they will be left to take care of them alone after a peripatetic husband has gone on his way.

That appeal is part of a campaign the authorities began recently for increased population to exploit the Soviet domain's natural resources and provide greater military manpower. It is an interesting addition to several movements launched in recent months aiming at producing a stable family life, startling like the ideal of bourgeoise society.

It is contained in a feuilleton in the June 7 issue Pravda, chief Communist party organ, by the noted Soviet writers Ilya Ilf and Eugene Petroff.

The Soviet Union's easy divorce law was not written in order that marriage could be used like a tramway, with one paying 10 kopeks fare and changing cars whenever the whim suits, they write. The law, they assert, was meant to relieve people of extra penalties and formalities when marriage proved unbearable, and a man who takes advantage of the leniency of the law to throw a wife overboard for no reason should be ostracized.

"Need one be surprised at the large number of operations to prevent birth?" they ask. "Often a woman is afraid to have a child because she has no confidence in her husband. She is his third wife, and how does she know he will not return from a vacation with a new wife?

Cynicism Is Assailed

"A woman in the Soviet Union has equal rights with a man, but there are men who think this equality delivers them from any obligation toward women. Sometimes they are roughly cynical toward women, saying there is no use in being sentimental since women have equal rights. In such an atmosphere the relations between a man and a woman are degraded and the importance of marriage disappears.

"A wedding is not considered an important event—it is like going to lunch, attending a movie or paying trade union dues.

"We must not forget that the Soviet women, having received rights also has received many duties. She studies and works like a man. Thus she puts the man under the obligation to care for the woman with special knightliness. Every girl must be valued not only as an engineer but as a future mother. The mother of one child must be valued as the future mother of eight children."

Seminole Indians Seek Land Grant

Everglades Tribe Reminds White Man Of His Many Broken Promises

An appeal for fulfillment of a broken pledge given them more than a century ago by the American Government has been made by the Seminole Indians of Florida to Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, and John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, reports a bulletin from the Department of the Interior.

Speaking through interpreters, the Seminole leaders explained to the Secretary and the commissioner, on their recent visit to the Indians in the Everglades, that in the long wars waged between the Seminoles and American forces, the Indians had never been defeated, but despite this fact lived now as mere squatters on land which they believed properly to be their own. They cited the treaty of Sept. 18, 1823, in which they were promised ownership of far more land than they now occupy.

At the same time the Seminoles presented a formal petition asking for large areas north, south and west of Lake Okeechobee, totaling nearly 3,000,000 acres, according to the New York Times. The 1823 treaty offered 5,000,000, together with other benefits.

During the Spanish sovereignty over Florida, the Seminoles held great areas of the best farm lands and they were primarily farmers and only secondarily huntsmen and dwellers in the hammocks and swamps. The Seminole wars, while never breaking their resistance, drove them into the wildest areas of the Everglades of Southern Florida. Their religious law requires that each man shall cultivate his field every year, but cultivable fields are few in the area to which the Seminoles retreated.

The Seminoles achieved a remarkable adaptation to the conditions within the Everglades, so that now they appear almost as native to the hammocks and prairies and lakes as the wild fowl, the raccoons and the otters.

But drainage has diminished the Everglades and uncontrolled hunting by sportsmen and commercial hunters has enormously depleted the wild life. Gradually the Seminoles have been forced by the impoverishment of the wilderness area to go into the coast towns and into commercial camps, where frequently they become mere objects for the curious to gaze on. However, all but a handful of Seminoles still contrive to spend the large part of each year within the Everglades.

Secretary Ickes, in replying to the petition of the Seminole leaders, explained the plan for the creation of a national park in the southern extremity of the Everglades, and stated that for a considerable time to come, in any event, he believed the Seminoles ought to have the right of subsistence hunting and fishing within the proposed park and that they should always have the labor preference. He added that he would support a plan in cooperation with the State of Florida for buying substantial areas to the north of the park, to be made into a permanent Indian reservation as the Seminoles' home for all time. Commenting on the Seminoles' petition, Commissioner Collier stated on his return to Washington:

"Three million acres probably never can be bought by the government for the Seminoles. A part of the land they have petitioned for—land which they regard as morally theirs already—is highly developed truck and citrus fruit land. The Seminoles' request must be weighed with the land requirements of Indians in other parts of the country, which are great, as there are more than 100,000 of totally landless Indians.

"Already the government is negotiating for the purchase of three tracts for the Seminoles, and cattle should be supplied which they can herd upon their little reservation already established south of Lake Okeechobee. In exchange for their 100,000 acres of relatively worthless land and water within the proposed park area, we hope that Florida will supply them with 100,000 acres north of the Tamiami Trail, close to the park area.

"Altogether, acreage of a quarter of a million probably can be supplied these Indians for a permanent reservation. Then, if the Federal Government and the State of Florida cooperate energetically, wild-life protection and restoration can be set in motion through the whole park area and in a million acres, at least, of the Everglades north of the park area. With land for planting, and land for stock grazing, and with a greatly increased game supply, and with a proper development and marketing of their crafts, the Seminoles undoubtedly will be able to develop a successful life of the kind they want, which is the life of wild Indians living in the fastnesses."

Secretary Ickes made this comment:

"When the Seminoles are called wild Indians it must not be understood that they are fierce, uncouth or dangerous to their neighbors. The opposite is the fact. The Seminoles are one of the gentlest of peoples. Their social organization is a rather complicated one and impose duties upon its members. Their camps in the Everglades are places of natural beauty. One of these camps which I visited, and which had to be reached over a rather faint trail in the jungle, had been occupied for many years and yet the overleaning trees were not burnt or scarred and the forest surroundings were actually less disturbed than they would have been through habitation by the raccoon, the otter or the bear.

"Undoubtedly, the Seminoles have a feeling for those aspects of nature which appeal to our own most subtly developed emotions, and they are not cruel hunters or trappers; they even make pets of such creatures as raccoons and otters. The Seminoles' desire to continue the primitive life ought to be viewed with sympathy by the American people, and it is within the power of the government and the State of Florida to salvage and re-create the Everglades, with the Indians as part of them, through meeting to a generous extent the Indians' own wishes."

Wife Of Baldwin Helps In Politics

Returns To Official Home Of The Prime Minister To Be Hostess And Adviser

Stanley Baldwin's wife, again hostess in No. 10 Downing Street, is as interested in public affairs as Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

For nearly forty-five years she has played an important part in the career of the new British Prime Minister, says the New York Times. Social worker, home maker and helper, in a thousand ways she has aided in building and maintaining her husband's reputation in Great Britain.

In the early days of his parliamentary career, he wanted to give up politics. But always gently, forcefully, his wife kept his nose to the grindstone.

"Your chance will come," urged Mrs. Baldwin. It did.

Mrs. Baldwin always carries lozenges for her husband when she accompanies him to meetings. She has made almost as many speeches as he has and can use biting epithet with telling effect just as she can talk in soft tones.

Her pet phrase for David Lloyd George, former Liberal Prime Minister, is "that prime auctioneer."

"My husband does not advertise himself," she said apologetically on one occasion while stumping the provinces on Mr. Baldwin's behalf.

She then went right in and gave him all the advertisement he could ask for.

The women of Great Britain, she hopes, will elect a parliament of their own to advise the House of Commons on feminine matters. Women should not be members of the House with the men, she asserts, although she was a suffragist in 1908.

Mrs. Stanley Baldwin's success in politics is said to be the result of her ability to influence those associated with her without making them feel they are being swayed. She admits giving her husband ideas that have helped him in his career and asserts she enjoys his full confidence.

"I have never asked my husband a question about his business in life," she was once quoted as saying, "because I know that anything he is prepared to tell me he will tell of his own accord."

Mrs. Baldwin's political ideals were expressed by her as follows:

"We believe that in politics as in everything else one must just 'follow the light' as one sees it. The mainspring of my husband's life and mine is the same. We want to do something for others before we pass on, not to leave everything just as we found it."

Navy Chief Hails Results Of War

Standley Urges A Businesslike Administration, With Annual Replacement Of Old Craft

The United States Navy is "highly efficient and we need have no fear of invasion of our coast," Admiral William H. Standley, United States chief of naval operations, said in an interview recently Aboard the U.S.S. Pennsylvania while at sea.

At the same time Admiral Standley made it clear that the navy has many needs, the chief material one today being new auxiliaries, supply and repair ships and tankers, to replace the old outworn eight-knot makeshifts that are a serious handicap to combatant ships. He again emphasized the importance of a "businesslike administration" of the navy, stressing the absolute necessity, if the navy is to be maintained at all, of an annual, steady, consistent building program to replace obsolete and outworn ships, says Correspondent Hanson W. Baldwin of New York Times. His story of the June 7 follows:

Admiral Standley talked about the navy's needs and fleet problem XVI, which is now ending as the fleet approaches San Diego, on the quarterdeck of the battleship Pennsylvania, as he watched the catapulting of two-seater Vought Corsair observation planes.

Approves Harbor in Hawaii

Commenting on the mimic war, which ends with the arrival of the fleet at San Diego Monday morning, Admiral Standley said it showed the facilities of the naval base at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, were "adequate for berthing the fleet, with plenty of room to spare." He added, however, that the base, "of course, is not entirely satisfactory," has a congested entrance and other faults.

He reiterated that this year's mimic war was but the sixteenth of such large-scale annual problems that the fleet has held in the Atlantic, Pacific and Caribbean, off Panama and Hampton Roads and between the West Coast and Hawaii many times before.

"The fact that the problem was held in the Honolulu-San Francisco-Alaska area had no significance other than that the ports and harbors of these areas belong to us," he said. "All the problems and various activities required for training the fleet, such as scouting, screening and battle exercises, are carried out. In addition to this, in sending our ships to Alaska we were familiarizing the personnel with the weather, the fogs, rains, currents, winds and other peculiarities of that area."

In speaking of the navy's needs, stressing the requirements for auxiliary vessels, he continued:

"In comparison with other powers, we are woefully deficient in modern tankers, modern cargo ships, &c."

An adequate merchant marine also is necessary, he said. A fleet operating from Pearl Harbor, he asserted, would require a large number of supply ships that the navy could not maintain in peacetime, and that if the fleet were operating from the Philippines those needs for a merchant marine and supply and cargo ships would be multiplied about tenfold.

Discussing the combatant ships of the navy, Admiral Standley declared that the latest class of the 10,000-ton cruiser type was generally considered to be very satisfactory within the limits prescribed by the treaties creating them. Ships like the Quincy and Tuscaloonsa, he added, had met with a "general consensus" of approval. But he went on to say that he did not know whether this type would be adhered to if there were unlimited building.

New Destroyers Praised

The performance of the new destroyers was praised as "highly satisfactory" by the highest ranking officer of the navy.

This, he continued, was the logical result of the United States neglect of building over a period of years. Now, because all destroyers are becoming obsolete simultaneously, the United States is building new ones to replace them almost simultaneously instead of building a few new ones each year.

Therefore, instead of learning the faults of each new class and correcting them in subsequent classes, the United States has built so fast that it is "putting mistakes into forty ships instead of building ten, learning their faults and correcting them." This, however, is due to our lag behind the treaty provisions, and if the United States is to catch up it must spurt between now and 1942, it was explained.

Therefore Admiral Standley hopes Congress will provide an orderly, consistent annual replacement program of about thirteen ships each year. He considers the establishment of this precedent of annual provision for replacements of warn-out ships a "businesslike administration of the navy."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Bridge Of The Arabian Nights

Bagdad is the city so often mentioned in the Arabian Nights as the capital of Harun al Rashid. The New City is separated from the old by the river Tigris, which is the Hiddekel of Garden of Eden fame. The two shores of the river are connected by the famous Maude Bridge, a bridge of boats about 650 feet long, which was named after General Maude, British conqueror of Bagdad in the World War, who died here from cholera in November 1917. The Pontoon Bridge has replaced an older one, over which the prophet Jonah is said to have crossed to Nineveh, after his submarine trip within a whale.

1600 Year Old Beer

In 1911, a German archeologist, digging in the ruins of an old Roman castle at Alzey, Rheinhessen, Germany, which was destroyed by the pagan tribe of the Alemanni in 353, came upon a buried jug of beer, more than 1600 years old. This is the oldest beer in existence today. The jug is still two-thirds full.

U.S. BORN JAPANESE CELEBRATE 4TH OF JULY

Thursday, Independence Day of the United States, did not escape the notice of a group of American citizens of Japanese antecedents in Tokyo, who despite the weatherman's warning of a typhoon gathered at the home of Miss Mary Oki at No. 1, Hatchome, Kamata, at 0:30 p.m. for a social event in celebration of the occasion. Thus, did they observe the holiday a day ahead of their brothers and sisters across the Pacific.

Dancing was enjoyed until a late hour. Refreshments were served.

The combined hostesses for the delightful occasion were the Misses Oki, Margaret Nishikawa, Grace Muraoka and Kiyoko Enomoto.

Among the invited guests were: Dr. Hugo Okonogi, Messrs. Ken Murayama, George Takizaki, Henry Tsurutani, Charles Toshii, Saburo Moriya, Gord Murata, and the Misses May Takeda, Lily Ota, Helen Hirata, Pauline Masuda and Hisa Masuda.

Five Liners Due To Test Record Of Normandie

Conte di Savoia, Queen Mary, Rex, Bremen And Europa Held Capable Of Challenge

The record-breaking initial westbound crossing of the French Line's new flagship Normandie—world's largest vessel and fastest merchantman afloat—has created unusual interest in the ultimate speed of several superliners now operating, and many marine experts are of the opinion that the next few weeks will see German and Italian shipping lines making a determined effort to recapture the coveted "Atlantic Blue Ribbon" which they formerly held, says the New York Herald Tribune.

When the Normandie steamed past Ambrose Lightship on June 2 at 11:02 a.m., she was the proud possessor of the speed honors for the east-to-west crossing, having negotiated the 3,102 miles from Southampton Nab in 4 day 11 hours and 40 minutes, an average speed of 29.64 knots. Her best day's run was 748 miles.

The Normandie often exceeded thirty-one knots on her record-breaking crossing to New York, and it is expected that once the giant liner's powerful engines are broken in she will easily attain thirty-two knots—a speed declared impossible for big passenger liners a few years ago.

Interest Revived in 1929

Interest in the Atlantic Blue Ribbon was revived in 1929 when the Bremen of the North German Lloyd Line wrested the speed honors from the famous old Cunarder Mauretania which had been undisputed speed Queen of the Atlantic for many years. The Bremen in 1934 improved her previous record by negotiating a 3,092-mile Atlantic run at an average speed of twenty-eight knots, her best time to date, but slightly under that of the Italian liner Rex, to which she lost the speed honors in 1933 when the Rex made a 3,181-mile run from Gibraltar to New York at an average speed of 28.92 knots.

One of the "mystery ships" among the high speed super-liners is the new Conte di Savoia of the Italian Line which sailed yesterday for Italy. Many shipping men believe that this vessel is faster than the Rex but has been purposely held back until the Normandie demonstrated what she was capable of doing. It would come as no surprise if the Conte di Savoia on the next voyage or two were pressed by her captain and engineers and established a record crossing.

Ever since the Bremen, Europa, Rex and Conti di Savoia entered service marine experts have held to the opinion that they never were pressed to the limit and still have a knot or two in reserve. They also believe that this will prove true of the Normandie, hence their interest in the coming race for the speed honors which will ultimately result in all of the vessels demonstrating their maximum speed.

Liner Queen Mary in Background

Looming in the background is the Cunard White Star liner Queen Mary, slightly smaller than the Normandie but bigger than all other liners. It is believed that when the latest pride of the British merchant marine enters service for the first time next June she too will show sensational speed performances and may capture the blue ribbon.

That many persons in Great Britain believe that the Queen Mary has an excellent chance of capturing the trans-Atlantic speed honors is seen in the move of H. K. Hales, M. P. for Hanley, in donating a silver trophy to be awarded to ships making the fastest crossing between Europe and the United States. The trophy soon will be presented to the Italian Line, owners of the former recordholder Rex, and will later be presented to the French Line, owners of the latest speed queen.

This is the first time any move has been made to create a permanent trophy for international competition among fast liners on the Atlantic. A committee of trans-Atlantic shipping men is being formed which will draw up rules and regulations for records and other matters connected with the holding of the trophy, and will act as trustee for the custody and disposal of the trophy.

Japan-Manchou Trade Council Plans Approved

Atlantic Lines Cheered By Big Travel Upturn

Booking 20% Ahead Of Last Year Reported By Some Firms; Eastbound Rush On

The biggest trans-Atlantic travel month since 1929 is being experienced by trans-Atlantic steamship companies and executives of several major lines report advance bookings are running 20 per cent ahead of last year and promise to make 1935 one of the best seasons in some time. A few companies, particularly the United States Lines, are booked to capacity for July sailings and have long waiting lists of persons who hope that cancellations will make it possible for them to obtain passage to Europe, says the New York Herald Tribune's issue of June 9, which follows:

Passenger traffic experts of several companies last night advanced various reasons for the unexpected travel spurt. James S. Mahool, general passenger traffic manager of the United States Lines, is of the belief that many persons, who held back from going abroad because of uncertainty over the future, now are confident that they have nothing to fear. He also believes that the Jubilee Celebration in England is attracting many. Charles H. Fecke, of the Cunard White Star Limited, also shares these views.

"Speaking for the United States and the American Merchant Lines, as well as for the associated Baltimore Mail Line, we greatly regret that we are not able to accommodate during the peak season the large number of persons who wish to book passage on our vessels," said Mr. Mahool. "In many instances the demand on the Washington and Manhattan for highclass accommodations is exceeding the supply by 100 per cent."

Washington Carried 938

Mr. Mahool said that the eastbound trans-Atlantic travel season which usually gets under way the latter part of June and extends well into July has proved all the more surprising this year inasmuch as the season has already started. The Washington, which sailed last Wednesday for Ireland, England, France and Germany, took out 938 passengers in all three classes—cabin, tourist and third—and was an absolutely full ship, with no spare rooms whatsoever. She and her sistership, the Manhattan, are booked to capacity until July and are doing the best business since they entered service a few years ago.

Vessels of the American Merchant and Baltimore Mail Lines also are booked to capacity through June and most of July, Mr. Mahool stated.

John Schroeder, resident director of the Hamburg-American Line-North German Lloyd, and one of the best known of trans-Atlantic travel experts, also reports excellent business for the ships of his company.

"Not only is there an appreciable increase of 20 per cent over last year in our bookings but all suites on the Bremen and Europa are sold out for June," said Mr. Schroeder. "All cabin accommodations on our cabin ships also are sold out for the June but there are a few cabins still available on the Bremen and Europa."

1,900 Passengers on Europa

An idea of the rush of trans-Atlantic travel as well as the business being done by the German combine can be had by considering the fact that the Europa, which sailed last night for Bremen via Southampton, took out 1,900 passengers in all classes, a record eastbound sailing for the year.

Mr. Secke, in discussing his company's business, revealed that the Aquitania, which sailed Friday for Cherbourg and Southampton, had a heavy passenger list and carried 325 first class, as compared with 230 first on a sailing this time last year. All other vessels in the company's fleet are virtually booked up and many will take out capacity lists during the eastbound season now under way, he added.

"During the last four or five years many persons accustomed to going to Europe did not do so for various reasons but they now are resuming their trips because of improved conditions and because they want a rest at sea and vacation abroad," said Mr. Fecke.

Another major trans-Atlantic company that is experiencing increased business is the Italian Line, which sailed the Conte di Savoia yesterday for Italy with 1,250 passengers in all classes. Aroldo Palanca, general manager of the company in the United States, recently stated that bookings on his company's vessels were well ahead of last year. Future sailings promise to produce capacity and near-capacity passenger lists.

Too True

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Loop-The-Loop Train

When the main line of the Southern Pacific was being built over the Tahachapi mountains of California in 1875, engineers met with many difficulties in planning an even grade for the road bed. Near Bakersfield a puzzling problem was that of gaining a required elevation in a limited distance, at the same time maintaining practical grades and curves. The "Loop" idea, perfected by the late Chief Engineer William Hood, made it possible to climb 77 feet in a distance of only 3795 feet by tunnelling through a ridge and swinging the tracks on a gradual grade and curvature around the crest of a small peak, making a complete loop in the tracks. With a train of 70 cars the head engine finds itself directly on top of the caboose when negotiating the loop.

A Real Foul Ball

Baseball is replete with oddities of all kinds, but one of the strangest and most pathetic happened in the Pacific Coast League in 1910. "Spider" Baum of the Sacramento Club came to bat and took a mighty swing that fouled the ball directly over the grandstand. "Spider's" wife was just entering the grounds, pushing their infant daughter in a perambulator, and his own foul ball hit the child on the head. The blow, of course, was very serious, but had no lasting effects.

Dr. Einstein Disputes New Uncertainty Theory

Professor Albert Einstein, the father of relativity, has taken issue with the "principle of uncertainty" formulated by Dr. Werner Heisenberg, of Germany. This principle was developed as part of the wave mechanics theory of the atom. It holds that two elements of reality cannot be determined with certainty at the same time, according to the New York Herald Tribune. If stated in terms of human affairs it would mean that if you determine with certainty how fast you are going you cannot determine with certainty where you are; and, conversely, if you know exactly where you are you cannot determine with certainty how fast you are going.

Professor Einstein, in a paper published in the current issue of "The Physical Review," the official organ of the American Physical Society, discusses his objections to this principle.

The Einstein paper simmers down to a group of relativity theory adherents saying to the quantum theory adherents: There is more reality of space, time, matter and motion in the universe than your equations can handle. We do not know the nature of this neglected phase of reality, and no one may ever know it, but we are hopeful that some theory can be framed to make it possible to include it in our experiments.

This latter statement is indicated by the final paragraph of the paper, which says: "while we have thus shown that the wave function does not provide a complete description of the physical reality, we left open the question of whether or not such a description exists. We believe, however that such a theory is possible."

Civilization's Chief Danger Is National Aims

Gilbert Murray Gives Romanes Lecture At Sheldonian Theatre In Oxford

Professor Gilbert Murray, delivering the Romanes Lecture in the Sheldonian Theater on June 14 at Oxford on "Then and Now," suggested that the main contrast between the Victorian age and our own was that in some sense the Victorian age formed a cosmos, a more or less intelligible and reasonable order, while we, with all our brilliant discoveries and movements, are bewildered beings, struggling in a kind of chaos.

He was basing his remarks, he said, on the elements which enabled Gladstone at the close of his days to sum up his life's work in the words: "I have presided over a great revolution," says The Times, London. In that age, much as they quarrelled about such matters as Home Rule for Ireland and votes for women, there was profound concord about the fundamentals of life.

To the men of his youth Western civilization, and especially British civilization, was simply the right road of human progress; others were false roads or mistakes; they could not take Hindu, or Islamic, or even Chinese civilization as a serious competitor with the Christian West.

One of the signs of their extreme faith in themselves at that time was the welcome which the age gave to destructive critics. When had Europe seen four writers of such immense popular influence as Tolstoy, Ibsen, Bernard Shaw, and H. G. Wells, whose activity was so predominantly critical and destructive? Yet none of them diagnosed the one real danger—they prophesied revolution and terrors which never came, but they did not see that the international anarchy of a world administered by some 60 sovereign independent States, nursing unlimited national ambitions, was a disease carrying the seeds of death.

Recovery and Progress

Had Epimenides fallen asleep in 1880 he would have been surprised by the intense vitality of a world which, after losing some 25,000,000 lives in the War, showed an increased population; after losing incalculable masses of wealth in the same abyss, was now richer than it ever was.

To-day there was a constant creation of new records in speed, in endurance, in flights to the stratosphere, or dives to the depth of the ocean, and advances were not confined to material things. Education was spreading, and what they called social service was more sensitive than ever it was in the nineteenth century. In Oxford they had ceased to be surprised when men and women with high honors in the final schools went to work for a pittance with the Workers' Educational Association or to teach philosophy to the unemployed.

People now discussed the imminence of the collapse of civilization as in the nineteenth century they did not. What had happened? It was no use saying simply that civilization had received a mortal wound, or that everything was due to capitalism or to democracy. The chaos of to-day seemed to be the result of the impact of sudden and multifarious changes, striking, unfortunately, at a time when the people of many nations were half mad with suffering, and all still staggering under the shock of the World War.

The most obvious of the changes was, of course, that of locomotion; but there were more silent changes to which they made little conscious response—such as diet, with its rich abundance of foods, stimulants, and narcotics.

Lower Standards

The greatest disseminator of ideas to-day was the cinema, which overleaped the boundaries of nationality and language. It was expensive to produce, however, and a film that has high intellectual value, such as Hamlet or Macbeth, would not have a dog's chance in the open market. Consequently people who appreciated the highest style had to content themselves with the lower style, and inevitably were influenced. Much the same problem existed in the theater today, and the same danger was more acute in the Press.

"Among all the disintegrating and bewildering influences I should have little doubt that our Western civilization, with the impetus of its old tradition, as well as its present vitality, could easily recover its equilibrium, were it not for one particular danger," said Professor Murray. "War, which up to a century ago offered possible advantages to the victor, and seldom inflicted irreparable damage, had now become incompatible with the conditions of civilized society. He was not thinking specially of the direct destruction of life and property involved in the actual fighting. The consequences lasted long after the killing stopped.

Chinese Smugglers Burn Customs Officer At Stake

Death at the stake, probably the most horrible and gruesome form of torture, is said to have been the fate few days ago in Chapoo of one, Fong Kwan, retired commander of a cruiser attached to the Salt Smuggling Preventive Force of the Salt Gabelle. Local officials of the Salt Revenue Department were unable to confirm the report, but stated that the man may at one time have been in the employ of the department.

Since his retirement, the report said, Fong had given the Chinese government information which resulted in the arrest of many salt smugglers. Finding Fong at home, the smugglers are said to have dragged him outside, bound him with ropes and placed the doomed man over a large pile of wood saturated with petrol and ignited, says the North China Daily News. Their revenge complete, the smugglers are said to have escaped in a boat.

Germ-Free Guinea Pigs Used In Experiments

Guinea pigs that have been kept entirely free from contact with germs from birth are more active and develop larger appetites than those that have not been protected. This observation resulted from such a germ-free breed raised by Professor J. A. Reyniers at the University of Notre Dame.

The purpose in raising germ-free animals is to make available living specimens for study of a single kind of germ, says a recent New York Herald Tribune report. If a body is contaminated with many germs, it is impossible to know the effect of a particular kind of germ administered experimentally as the effect of one kind of germ may be retarded or accentuated by other germs.

Professor Reyniers's results in raising animals in a healthier than normal state under conditions that eliminate germs through either water, food, air or surroundings, indicates that germs are not essential to life. On the contrary, their absence is beneficial.

Protection is afforded the guinea pigs even before their birth. They are born in a sealed compartment in which they pass their lives. It is supplied with filtered and sterilized air. The food is sterilized for several days in an antechamber.

There are ports in the main chamber supplied with rubber gloves through which Professor Reyniers can insert his hands to care for his charges.

From each litter raised in this manner Professor Reyniers takes out two guinea pigs which are raised in a normal manner as controls. It is by comparing the normal animals with the germ-free that he was able to determine that freedom from germs made the animals more active and larger eaters.

France Objects To Proposal On Naval Programs

London Suggests Interchange Of Information With Paris And Berlin

Rengo

PARIS, July 3—Objections to the British Government's suggestion for mutual communication among the British, French and German Governments concerning their respective naval programs are voiced in official French quarters here today. It is stated by certain circles that the French Government has definitely refused to join Britain in the proposed exchange of information on naval programs.

The chief objection is that France would thereby seem to approve the recent Anglo-German naval agreement, whereas France has hitherto refrained from agreeing to it because of its bilateral character.

France further considers, it is stated, that the British Government should, as a matter of normal procedure, communicate to France any information it possesses regarding the German intentions by virtue of the London communique of February 3 as well as the Stresa tripartite agreement.

Official quarters also declare that France's future naval program could only be decided after the German program was made known. It is also indicated in this connection that the Anglo-French conversations are already under way with the French hoping for an agreement granting her a better naval ratio.

Awaiting Parley Call

Nippon Dempo-United Press

WASHINGTON, July 2—Administration quarters here believe that the naval Powers are all adding "paper ships" to their naval construction programs, in order that the credence of rival naval Powers will permit of the dual purpose of forcing someone else to call a naval conference and of watching for a position advantageous to bargaining when the conference is called.

The present activity in announcing and concealing purported plans for fleets apparently is regarded here as being intended to bluff someone into calling a conference, which is a responsibility all the Powers are anxious to avoid.

In the naval game Great Britain apparently is playing Germany against France for the purpose of forcing a European naval conference that would clarify the atmosphere and increase the possibility of success for a world naval conference.

The United States' policy is reported to be one of standing by and watching, but meantime maintaining the present ratios. Apparently the United States actually intends to reach treaty strength by 1942. The tentative plans to build seven battleships in seven years, commencing in 1937, are regarded as being merely for purposes of bargaining. It is doubtful if any nation actually intends to build as many ships as is being hinted.

Philippine Defense Problem

Meanime, one of the most perplexing problems to both the navy and army is how the Filipinos are going to defend themselves in the event of foreign aggression after they attain their independence. Apparently reliable reoprts from Manila say that General Douglas McArthur will be offered the opportunity of devising some scheme of defense if Mr. Manuel Quezon is elected President of the Philippines. Many naval experts believe that the United States could not defend the Philippines during a war in the Pacific in any case, due to their distance from home bases. However these same experts disagree on the question of whether the Philippines, properly equipped, could defend themselves.

In many quarters here it is believed that should Japan attempt to dominate the Philippines by infiltration, by commercial activities or by inclusion of the islands within the scope of Tokyo's so-called Asiatic Monroe Doctrine, Great Britain would offer active opposition for both commercial and military reasons. Senator Ernest W. Gibson, in a recent report, stated: "The situation created by our withdrawal will be to bring Japan and Great Britain face to face in the Philippines. . . . The solution may force a secret treaty to delimit or undelimit spheres of influence and control of Philippines trade."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Order Of The Golden Fleece

This order, which is considered the most desirable and exclusive of all decorations in existence, was founded by Duke Philip the Good of Burgundy, who, in addition to having been married 3 times, is credited with having had 12 mistresses. The names of these 12 "Queens of the left hand," are recorded in history. The first on the list was the golden-haired Maria Van Crombugge. When the King discovered by accident that Maria was baldheaded and was compelled to wear a wig, the lady was greatly embarrassed, but the gallant Burgundian, reassured her by founding the Order of the Golden Fleece. The Golden Fleece of the order commemorates the lady's yellow wig. This is the history of the order to which practically only crowned royal heads are eligible.

The U. S. Fez

The Moro Constabulary is a U.S. Auxiliary military force serving in the Southern Philippines. The Moros serving in it are Mohammedan Malays, and their religion frowns upon hats with brims. This religious objection was met by equipping them with red fezes, each trimmed with a black tassel. The objection to a brim in headgear is that it would prevent them from touching the ground with their foreheads during prayer.

French Auto Magnate Dies At 57 Years

Rengo

PARIS, July 3—Mr. Andre Citroen, well-known automobile manufacturer, died here this morning following a long illness. He was 57 years old.

He was the first person to introduce American mass production in the European automobile industry. The factories owned by the late automobile magnate, employed, before the present depression, more than 20,000 hands.

The Citroen Company was last year placed under receivers, but recently an agreement was reached with the creditors, enabling the company to resume business.

The Ship in Which Will Adams reached Japan in 1600
'Dr. Scherer's presentation of "Miura Anjin" as a Japanese samurai is thrilling, and his portraiture of that bygone time has the ring of truth. His romance is real history, and I find it far superior to any historical novel of recent years. For he knows the Old Japan at first hand, and has absorbed its atmosphere. H. I. H. the Crown Prince is scheduled to spend the summer at the Imperial villa at Shiobara, leaving Tokyo about July 13.

T. M. the Emperor and Empress leave here for the Imperial villa at Hayama together with T. I. H. Princess Taka and Princess Yori about July 15, it is reported.

In August, their Majesties are expected to proceed to the Imperial villa at Nasu in Tochigi prefecture, where the Crown Prince and the two Imperial Princesses will also spend the rest of the summer.

FOREIGN CORESPPONDENT ENTERTAINED

A party of 14 foreign correspondents in Tokyo were guests of the Board of Tourist Industries, the Japan Tourist Bureau and the Foreign Office at a cormorant fishing excursion in Gifu on Sunday night. The party left Tokyo station at 8:50 a.m. Sunday and arrived at Nagoya shortly after 2 p.m. After a visit to the famous Nagoya Castle and the Tokugawa Park, the trip was resumed to Gifu.

All conditions for fishing by cormorant were ideal and a large catch was witnessed by the visitors from adjoining vessels. During and after the fishing a brilliant display of fireworks was staged. Gifu, noted throughout the country, not alone for its cormorants but for its fireworks as well, outdid itself on Sunday by putting on such a display of fireworks as has seldom been witnessed anywhere.

Some of the members of the party left Gifu by the midnight train for Tokyo while the rest of the party returned the following day. Those making up the party were Mr. M. J. Cox of Reuters, Mr. William H. Chamberlain of the Christian Science Monitor, Mr. V. L. Kudriavtsev of Tass, Mr. Percy Whiteing of the Australian Press Association, Mr. A. Balk of the Hamburger Nachrichten, Mr. Frank H. Hedges of the Washington Post and Kansas City Star, Miss R. Gantenbein of Neue Turicher Zeitung, Bern, Mr. Frederick H. Wright of the New York News, Mr. K. Sheba of the Chicago Tribune, Mr. Georges Alsot of L'Agence Havas, Mr. A. R. Catto of Exchange Telegraph Co., London, Mr. T. Sagara of Rengo, Mr. Rudolf Weise of Deutsches Nachrichtenburo, and Miss L. Abegg of Munchner Neueste Nachrichten.

JAPAN-AMERICAN LUNCHEON

One of the most pleasant affairs of the season was the farewell luncheon given by the American Japan Society in the banquet hall of the Imperial Hotel on Monday in farewell to the American Ambassador Mr. Joseph Clark Grew and Mrs. Grew who leave on July 19 on furlough for two months.

The luncheon was also given as a farewell to Count Aisuke Kabayama who is leaving on a mission to London and later will visit the United States, also for Baron Dan who departs shortly as the representative of the Society for International Relations and will visit art collections, museums and meet leaders in cultural movements. Baroness Dan, who was born in the United States will accompany Baron Dan. The luncheon was also in honor of Mr. and Mr. W. S. Phelps who are leaving Japan for good in the autumn after their long residence of 30 years.

Prince Tokugawa who presided, gave a brief address after which the American Ambassador spoke on the friendly relations between the two nations and emphasized the spirit of cooperation which exists at the present.

Count Kabayama followed explaining the purpose of his coming visit to London where he will represent the House of Peers at the Parliamentary Economic Conference. He will then make a tour of the leading cities in America as President of the Society for International Cultural Relations to establish relations between his society and cultural groups in the United States.

Mr. Phelps in his farewell speech emphasized the inventive spirit in feudal Japan and told how the genius of the land had been employed in overcoming difficulties before western science was introduced. Dr. Jerome Davis, lecturer at Doshisha in Kyoto, touched briefly on social questions.

Among the distinguished Japanese present, the members of the American Embassy staff, and prominent American residents, were the following: Prince Iyesato Tokugawa, Mr. Setsuichi Aoki, Mr. Ryozo Asano, Mr. Eiichi Baba, Mr. Gonichiro Fujihira, Mr. and Mrs. Kikusaburo Fukui, Mrs. Koichi Fukui, Mrs. Kazuo Horikoshi, Mr. Yasunosuke Fukukita, Mr. Yoshio Ichikawa, Mr. and Mrs. Kisaji Fukushima, Dr. Seiji Hishida, Mr.

British Columbia Seeks To Smash New Deal Laws

Courts To Be Asked To Throw Out Part Of Federal Act

British Columbia, through its Government, will go into the courts of Canada and attempt to smash federal legislation which forms part of the Federal Government's "new deal." Specifically it will ask the courts to throw out the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, under which farmers' debts can be reduced by official tribunals.

But behind this case lies a prospective national controversy over the old issue of provincial rights, almost exactly parallel to the states' rights issue in the United States, on which the NRA was rejected by the courts, says, the Christian Science Monitor. Thus the new deal in Canada must undergo almost exactly the same test as that applied to the legislation of the Roosevelt ministry.

In announcing that the Government would attack the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, T. D. Pattullo, Premier of British Columbia, declared his Government would oppose not only this legislation, but all legislation which infringed provincial rights. Much of the new deal legislation now before the Canadian Parliament, he indicated, invaded the provincial field of jurisdiction, in the opinion of his Government. "We will fight against such legislation," he said, British Columbia could not tolerate any breach of its rights under the British North America Act, Canada's Constitution.

Mr. Pattullo, in raising the issue of provincial rights, has thrown the strength of British Columbia Liberalism behind W. L. Mackenzie King Canadian Liberal leader, who has raised the same issue in Parliament.

But enemies of the Pattullo Government have been quick to assert that it is simply playing politics and hiding the real economic issues of the times behind a constitutional smoke-screen.

The British Columbia argument against the Farmers Creditors Arrangement Act will be taken into the courts immediately in a test case which doubtless will go to the Imperial Privy Council in London for final settlement. The British Columbia Government raised no serious objection when this act was applied to private debts owing between individuals, but it decided to oppose the statue when the Federal Government attempted to apply it to debts owing by individuals to the Provincial Treasury here. Such federal interference in the business of the Provincial Government was regarded as intolerable, with the result that Canada faces an NRA legal fight of its own.

US Navy To Ash Faster, More Modern Auxiliaries

new engines. The New York and Texas should have the turret gun elevations increased when the new five-inch anti-aircraft batteries are installed.

The Tennessee and California require modern fire control installation and modernization in other ways unless the treaties' expiration makes possible a replacement of old battleships with new ones.

The Prometheus should be refitted and put into commission as a repair ship. The old collier Neptune should become an aircraft tender. Funds also are needed to manufacture new armor-piercing 14-inch and 16-inch projectiles, but no money was provided in next year's appropriation bill for any of these things.

313 Ships Planned for 1942

However, despite these minor deficiencies, the navy is fast rounding into a treaty-strength navy equal or superior to any in the world. By 1942 the treaty navy will consist of 313 ships as follows:

Fifteen battleships, the same as at present.

Six aircraft carriers, an increase of two.

Eighteen heavy cruisers, an increase of three.

Seventeen light cruisers, an increase of seven.

Thirteen destroyer leaders, an increase of thirteen.

Eighty-four destroyers, a decrease of seventeen.

Thirty-eight submarines, a decrease of sixteen.

Four light mine layers, the same as at present.

Four mine layers, an increase of three.

Thirteen gunboats and sloops, an increase of two.

One ammunition ship, the same as at present.

Four store ships, an increase of two.

Two hospital ships, an increase of one.

Two cargo ships, the same as at present.

Twenty-one mine sweepers, the same as at present.

Eight oilers, an increase of one.

Two transports, the same as at present.

Four repair ships, an increase of two.

Five submarine rescue vessels, the same as at present.

Five submarine tenders, the same as now.

Thirteen ocean tugs, the same as now.

Three aircraft tenders, an increase of two.

Two patrol vessels, the same as now.

Fifteen mine sweepers with aircraft, an increase of seven.

Eight auxiliaries, including the Utah and Wyoming, the same as now.

In addition to this increase in the number of ships and replacements of old ships with new ones, airplanes will be increased from less than 1,000 to 1,910. Instead of 5,499 line officers and 82,500 men, there will be 7,941 line officers and 110,000 men.

The new ships, new planes, new officers and new men will be the navy's biggest problem in the years between now and 1942. The fleet will have to absorb a great number of new ships, man them with green men, train inexperienced officers and at the same time maintain its present high standard of discipline and efficiency.

It will be one of the most severe peacetime tests the navy has ever faced, because the coming years will mark an unprecedented period of peacetime expansion.

Co-eds At Oxford Are Punished For Practical Jokes

Eights Week Dance Banned For Tricks Played On College Principal

There has been a surprising sequel at St. Hilda's College, Oxford, to the practical jokes played on the Principal, Miss Julia Mann, during the term, which culminated in the banning of the Eights Week dance, one of the chief attractions of the year, as a punishment.

Unavailing efforts have been made to find the perpetrators of the last joke, which resulted in Miss Mann being locked out of her room for several hours

It was stated that Miss Edith Shawcross, the Editress of the "Isis" and a tennis Blue, had been sent down for the rest of the term, reports the North China Daily News.

It is alleged that she was concerned in supplying the magazine with material concerning the ban on the dance.

Undergraduate magazines are subjected to censorship by the Proctors, and it is understood that the University authorities in this way found two paragraphs, which they sent to the Head of St. Hilda's College. The sending-down of Miss Shawcross for the rest of the term was the result.

The Proctors have approached the Principal, asking that the question should be reconsidered, but Miss Mann refused to reopen the matter. It is expected that failing the Proctors' ability to have the matter reopened, it will be taken before the Vice-Chancellor.

Another incident revealed is that an undergraduate who was connected with the University magazine concerned intervened on behalf of Miss Shawcross.

His action, it is understood, has been resented, and, it is stated, he has been reported to the authorities under an old statute for interfering in University affairs.

Miss Shawcross is in her third year, and is studying botany. She is to be allowed to take her final examinations.

Miss Shawcross, the Central News reports, denies that she either wrote the paragraphs or supplied the information for them.

"The whole matter had been published days previously," she said, "and the paragraphs were not even published in the 'Isis.'"

Mr. Keith Briant, the Sub-Editor of the "Isis," informed the "Morning Post" that he himself wrote the paragraphs in question, and obtained the information contained in them.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Soldier Of 3 Centuries

Jean Theurel, of Dijon, France, who established the most amazing record of military service, was born in 1684. He joined the French Army in the regiment of Touraine in 1699 at the age of 16. France was then engaged in the Franco-Dutch war, and the next 30 years were filled with almost uninterrupted foreign warfare. Theurel engaged in so many battles that he told military historians later that he could not compute them within a hundred or so of their actual number. He fought in the War of the Spanish and Austrian Successions, and served in a French regiment under the orders of Leszczynski, King of Loraine.

In 1777, King Louis XV promoted the 93-year-old veteran to the rank of captain and retired him from active service. Theurel had been wounded hundreds of times, but as he was not sufficiently incapacitated, he could not be sent to the Invalides. He continued to be carried on the active rolls of the Army and resided at the barracks of the First Company in Paris. In 1802, Napoleon I granted him a pension of 1,500 francs, which he continued to draw until his death in 1807, at the age of 123. His "stretch" of army enlistment lasted from 1699 to 1802, a total of 103 years, and continued through 3 centuries.

Happy Landings

A great safety factor in the operation of airplanes is the strict regulation by the Department of Commerce making it compulsory that a plane be able to glide 7 times as far as its altitude. However, most planes today will glide 10 times their altitude, and therefore a plane flying at an altitude of 2 miles can choose any spot within an area of 1,256 square miles for a landing, should the motor go dead. (2x10x2 equals 40 miles diameter. 40x40x. 7854 equals 1,256 square miles). There are not many places in the United States where a landing spot cannot be found within such a large area.

Finnish Fascists Greet Envoy Sent By Il Duce

Ezio Gray, Italian Deputy and leader of the Fascist intellectual organization in Rome, was greeted in Helsingfors, Finland on June 8 as Premier Mussolini's special representative. He went there to present to Finnish Fascists two large bronze busts of the Italian Premier.

The Finnish Fascists gave Signor Gray a rousing welcome, and official quarters also paid courteous attention to his visit, the object of which is to convey Signor Mussolini's appreciation of a visit made to Rome a year ago by Finnish-Fascists, who paid warm homage to the Italan dictator and presented a Finnish knife to him. A similar token was given later to Chancellor Hitler by the Finnish Fascists, says the New York Times.

Wictor Kosola, leader of the Finnish Fascist movement, accepted the gifts from Premier Mussolini, and on behalf of his party made a gift of a Finnish bear cub to the Italian Premier.

Many U.S. Democratic Leaders Held 'Disturbed'

There is hardly any possibility of his letting us pass comfortably into the calm of a Coolidge administration.

Under this condition and all the conditions, politics during the next year or more is going to be exciting, and the excitement may include resignation of some Democrats now in the Administration. It was impossible for Mr. Douglas, with his convictions, to stay. Some other officeholders are in their conscience as powerfully opposed to some of Mr. Roosevelt's actions as Mr. Douglas was.

Democrats in Congress are under no imperative obligation of taste or loyalty to support Mr. Roosevelt in policies in which they do not believe. Those of them who come up for renomination and re-election next year must take a count of personal prudence. At least most of them do—some do not. Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, will be up for re-election next year, and he is forthright in his dissent from Mr. Roosevelt.

As to how Democrats in Congress as a whole feel about the Administration's policies, it is not possible to generalize. Some of the rank and file of Democrats in the House may not have strong convictions one way or the other. Others are disturbed about what Mr. Roosevelt is doing, but place the expediency of party solidarity above personal conviction. As to Democrats in both Senate and House who understand political principles and can see where Mr. Roosevelt is taking the country—as to these I should say that three out of five, in their consciences, strongly dissent. It is a commonplace of Washington gossip to hear that Democrats who have key places in Congress, who support the Administration's measures, are as gravely disturbed as any one else about the course on which the President has taken the country.

Leaders Troubled

The late Speaker Rainey of the House said privately that he felt the course would take America first to a phase of Fascism, which would be brief, and then to Communism. The private views of some other Democrats eminent in leadership, while not going so far in alarm, are seriously troubled. This is familiar to persons in contact with the intimacies of the cloakroom. Recently a Senator, not himself a Democrat but familiar with the views of Democrats, offered to be that the Democrats next year would not renominate Mr. Roosevelt. This is almost fantastic, for the power of a President in office to renominate himself is almost invincible.

As to Democratic leaders not in Congress, Democratic leaders now in private life, I should say that fully nine out of ten are seriously disturbed about what Mr. Roosevelt is doing in the name of the Democratic party. There are three living former Democratic candidates for President. Without having talked with any of them for many months, my confident guess is that two of the three, perhaps even all three, deplore much that is being done. Some Democratic Governors are almost ready to express open dissent. Democrats who in the past have held high office are typified by Mr. Newton D. Baker. I have not talked with Mr. Baker since Mr. Roosevelt became President, and I have no knowledge of his mind; but I should guess that he must be deeply disturbed.

The sum of all the dissent on the part of Democratic leaders would seem to create the material for some kind of union of conservative Democrats with the Republicans. To say the materials exist is not necessarily to predict the thing will happen. The materials alone are not enough; some one, some individual or individuals, must provide initiative. Here as everywhere is illustration of the law of individualism. As Emerson put it, "Every institution is the shadow of some man." Every organization, from a government or a political party down to a bridge club, illustrates the law of individualism, all consist of some one at the center with exceptional traits of personality or exceptional talent for the job in hand, with others around him and accessory to him. So it is if we are to have movement toward common action by Republicans and conservative Democrats. As it was once put by a talented American political organizer, "Things don't happen, they are brought about."

President Roosevelt's proposal that the Federal government shall have greatly increased power, the states less, must add greatly to the tendency of large groups of Democrats to oppose him. Ever since the Democratic party existed it has been a first principle of that party in the South that the states should be carefully guarded in the self-government which they retained when the Constitution was written, and without which they would never have assented to the Union.

South Guards State's Rights

"State's rights," with all they imply, mean more to the South than any other political or economic principle. After Mr. Roosevelt's recent action, it is difficult to see how Southern editors and other leaders of Southern thought can in good conscience be silenced.

Mr. Roosevelt must have had danger from the South in mind when he practiced the caution he did in his early appeal to the country from the decision of the Supreme Court. He was so strongly moved that he could not restrain himself from making the appeal. But, in his early statements, he refrained from going so far as to suggest concretely an amendment to the Constitution which should take away from the states much of their power of self-government.

That the South should fail to take account of what Mr. Roosevelt has done seems just incredible. And if by any possibility the South should be willing, in any organized way, to oppose the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt, his re-election could hardly take place.

Third Party Plan 'Impractical' In U.S., Says Edge

Time Too Short To Organize Anew, States Former U.S. Envoy To France

The Supreme court's body blow which completely wrecked Mr. Roosevelt's program to nationalize American industry and regiment its citizens has inspired renewed discussion of practical political realignments aimed to terminate the extreme socialistic plans of the badly crippled New Deal.

For months it has been plainly apparent that a large and influential section of the Democratic party was completely out of step with the President's program of planned economy and centralized control, says Walter E. Edge, former American Ambassador to France. This development has found expression in various forms and particularly as to the position to be taken by the political parties in the next Presidential campaign.

There have been emphatic demands for a coalition of Republicans and Democrats who disagree with the policy of the Administration's determination to administer as well as regulate the business of the country.

The present intransigent attitude of Mr. Roosevelt should aid and encourage such a combination greatly. Without attempting to prophesy the President's final position, which in the light of his conflicting public statements is impossible, the demand for a uniting of opposing forces is imperative. Reviewing the President't attitude in the two outstanding crises since his election, one is justified in the conclusion that he prefers temporary confusion to broad co-operation.

The history of his refusal to join with President Hoover in endeavoring to avert the bank crisis just prior to his inauguration is being told publicly for the first time. And now that the Supreme Court unanimously has blocked his ambitious program of centralized control, he again seems to invite uncertainty rather than readjustment. This indicates to many that his indecision is more political than constructive and still further justifies a combination of those forces, irrespective of party, who are in disagreement with his most recently expressed policies.

Some advocates of such a coalition have suggested frankly the formation of a new party, presumably with a new party name. Personally, I believe this would be a mistake. Such an arrangement necessarily would force the new party into the position of being a third party, which would make its status most difficult. Political history has certainly emphasized that fact. The Palmer-Buckner split in 1896, while no doubt assisting President McKinley's election, polled fewer than 200,000 votes of more than 13,000,000.

From the practical standpoint, I am sure, it would be just as impossible to have the Republican party give up its charter as it would be to have the Democratic party cease to function. No doubt a section of the Republican party, either from the Right or Left Wing, may affiliate with other groups with similar opinions and convictions, but no individual or collection of individuals has the power or authority to sweep the party from existence.

Therefore, inasmuch as the Democratic party, of course, will continue to function with President Roosevelt as its leader and nominee, and apparently maintain views not in harmony with the convictions of many of its members, the latter should affiliate with the Republican party under a co-ordinated program which undoubtedly could be agreed upon. Again from the practical standpoint, the Republican party is the only existing political organization on which to build, assuming the objective is to encourage permanent recovery through the defeat of Mr. Roosevelt's policies.

The Republican party has existing national, state, district and county setups, and it would be impossible to build a new organization of this character in a few weeks under another name. This is not a question of stubborn party selfishness. It is a matter of just plain ordinary common sense if real results are to be obtained.

If citizens who have affiliated heretofore with the Democratic party and a large section of the Republican party could agree on a declaration of principles along the lines of the 1932 Democratic platform, which should not be difficult, there would be no reason why there would not be honor and credit enough to go around.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Unsinkable Ship

An all-steel ship that is an innovation in shipbuilding was launched at Camden, N. J., April 6, 1935, when the Floating Hospital of the St. John's Guild on New York Harbor went down the ways. It is positively unsinkable. The entire hull of the vessel could be destroyed and her 25 watertight compartments would keep her afloat. Or, she could be cut in two at any point of her length and the severed portions would remain afloat and stable, the watertight subdivisions being more complete than any passenger-carrying vessel ever constructed.

The Floating Hospital, which will be officially christened at the Battery, New York City, on Decoration Day, will be used to give daily excursions around New York Harbor for ailing mothers and children. It accommodates 1,525 people.

flocking places. It was on this peninsula that more than nine centuries ago the Norsemen landed—or so the legend runs—and named it Markland. Twenty-six years after Columbus discovered or rediscovered America came the first attempt by the French to settle Markland, which they named Acadia.

A century later saw the beginnings of the 150-year struggle between French and English for Acadia's possession, which ended with the taking of Louisburg by General Amherst and General James Wolfe and with the destructions of its defenses by the grandfather of Lord Byron. Louisburg, with its dramatic history, its romantic traditions and haunting charm, is historically one of the most interesting places on the American Continent and looks it.

It is this respect second only to Quebec, the Gibraltar of America and the only walled city on this continent. Because of its own attractions and the fact that it is a jumping-off place for so many excursions into the surrounding country, Quebec is probably visited by more Americans than any other city in Canada.

A visit to Quebec is a pilgrimage in time as well as space. There is nothing quite like it elsewhere on this side of the Atlantic. Its steep streets recall a French medieval city, its monuments equally record the glories of old France and the tribulations and achievements of the French settler. Historically, it is the mother city of that vast expanse of territory lying west and south from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico, now under two flags and neither of them French. La Salle and Champlain are names that ring with equal familiarity in Canadian and American ears. Ontario also has its historical landmarks, many of them recalling the only two wars that have marred the relations of Canada and the United States.

The Great Lakes, the Muskoka Lakes and the Thousand Islands lure the traveler with blue water and green pine forests. Year after year the new paved highways are drawing him further and further into the recesses of Northwestern Ontario, with its 50,000 inland lakes, its caribou, moose and deer, its bass and pike and trout, its organized accommodation. In the heart of virgin forests he now finds beds, plain cooking and guides who know where the fish are biting. Less far afield he can find Summer hotels, built beside some smiling lake, with bathing beaches, tennis courts, golf courses, dance floors and other comforts that none but a fisherman would despise.

glorious testimony to the charity of the Scottish people through the Church of Scotland (Presbyterian). Scottish doctors, with one Danish doctor, and several Chinese practitioners trained in Aberdeen and Edinburgh, take care of the thousands of patients. There is one especially famous character in Dr. Colin Simpson of Aberdeen. He has had an adventurous career. After receiving his diplomat he went on a butterfly hunting expedition up the Amazon and later joined the Church of Scotland in China where he remained until the Great War. Then restlessness took him. Despairing of being "home in time to take a hand in the fighting"—how many Britons were thus unnecessarily impatient in 1914—he went to a friend in the old Russian Legation at Peking and asked him to use his influence to get him a commission as a line officer with the czar's army. This was accomplished and for a whole year, concealing his medical training but not so easily hiding his complete ignorance of the Russian tongue, he fought in the trenches. In a great emergency when the number of casualties exceeded the capacity of the medical staff, he disclosed his profession and from that time onwards was numbered among the surgeons. But with such brilliant effect that he was placed in charge of a royal hospital at St. Petersburg.

Dr. Simpson's Fate

With the revolution Dr. Simpson became a refugee in the Soviet domain. His savings were confiscated. Destitute he roamed about the country until, several months later, he was able to cross the northern frontier. Without papers and plus a mighty beard, he arrived from one of the Scandinavian ports, only to be arrested as an "obvious" spy in his native city of Aberdeen. When that was cleared up he joined the British forces and served for the rest of the war on the Western Front. Now, with failing eyes, his brilliance as an operator is handicapped, but with the aid of Chinese surgeons he performs great feats of diagnosis and healing, besides administering the medical city of "Hsiao Ho Yen."

Closely allied with their Scottish brethren are the Irish Presbyterians of whose hospitality in many Manchurian stations I have a lively memory. There was, for instance, until quite recently Dr. Gordon of Changchun, now called Hsinking, the capital of Manchuria. He had been in Manchuria more than forty years and barely escaped with his life during the Boxer rebellion. Gordon in his Belfast retreat will be able to recall to astonished audiences, how he interceded for criminals, or mere suspects, hanged by their thumbs; how he saw a whole town laid waste and every soul killed or desperately wounded, as a disciplinary touch of a military tuchun. After the Boxer settlement he came back to Manchuria with his wife and two small children, and landed at Newchwang, now called Yingkou. The valiant Scottish goodwife wanted to be home in Changchun. Bullying her husband she insisted on his hiring the Chinese equivalent of a covered wagon, a springles cart drawn by Manchurian ponies, on which the party travelled for many days "up country" through territory not entirely over its Boxer blood lust. There were no trains running. The bairns rode on the cart. Doctor and his frail "tai tai" who weighed little more than 100 pounds at the time, and is constructed of whipcord and copper, trudged most of the way, sleeping at nights in Chinese inns or farmhouses.

The traveller through Manchuria finds these missionaries, Catholic fathers or Protestant ministers, kindly in temper and brilliant in mental equipment. I know of one Irish girl, born of missionary parents in Chinhsien, north of the Great Wall of China, who can make a piano "speak." She is a doctor who, from her drab little Manchurian town makes long and arduous journeys to villages and farmsteads, soothing, operating, delivering of child, treating smallpox or the dreaded typhus. Returning to her grey brick home, or on a few days of leave to the "big city and bright lights" of Mukden, she pours out her soul via the piano, with a touch and a power of professional quality.

The Scottish Girl Doctor

Then there is a Scottish girl doctor, a trim little lass in her late twenties, who has complete charge of a hospital at Hsinking, whose dreadful experience last winter is all in the day's work for her. A laborer, having saved up his cash for a year, was walking from Kirin to Hsinking in bitter weather. He was held up by brigands. They took the small pence he had in his sash and the bed he was carrying. "Any more?" they inquired. The coolie pleaded they had taken all. But they searched him and found silver in his padded clothing. For lying they tied him to a tree and left him to freeze. He was liberated by travellers only when his legs were frozen to the knees and his arms to the elbows. The man was carried to the Franciscan Convent, and the Mother Superior, having no medical facilities, got in touch with the Irish Protestant Mission (the lady doctor there treats her sisters of Rome for their ailments) and begged for assistance. With a Chinese nurse to help her the pink-cheeked British girl operated and took off both legs. But the gangrene had gone too far and the man later died, but not until many days of intense effort had been made to save him. He asked to be baptized but whether in the Roman or Anglicized faith I have no knowledge and I feel sure the sisters and the doctor have no quarrel about the matter. A few weeks ago police brought to the same convent a four-year old boy, badly frozen. He had been thrown out to die because the parents could not support him, a frequent occurrence here, but decreasing under the new enlightenment. Again the Irish doctor was called in, but this time the diagnosis advised against operation; the child could not possibly live. He was made as comfortable as possible and died in great agony.

The Anglican chaplain—there is only one—must have one of the world's most extensive parishes. He has churches at Harbin, Mukden, Yingkou and Dairen, 1,000 miles separating them. Between them he divides up his Sunday and at other times conducts, with his wife, a school for foreign children at Mukden, and where the daughter of the British Consul-General also teaches.

The Danish Lucherans

The Danish Lucherans have half a hundred missionaries doing medical and teaching duties in the cities and remote backland. It was their veteran doctor, a Danish American named Neilsen, who was taken prisoner by bandits who employed a specially mean device. They gained admission to the country hospital at night by carrying one of their number and saying he was desperately wounded by a fall. Once inside they held up the institution and carried off the man, who had befriended them more than once, for he recognized several of his old patients. In the six months of his captivity he rarely spent more than one night at the same camp, and it is a wonder he survived considering his proximity to three score and ten years, his corpuence and need for special diet. Japanese troops, operating with secret agents, eventually trapped the gang and secured the doctor's freedom on promise of immunity for the gang.

The experience of the Scheut Fathers in Mongolia provides a terrible page in modern evangelism. The scourge of Mongolia is typhus fever. It is carried from camp to camp by lice and as the missionaries have to live as the natives on their rounds, they are exposed to insect raids. The death rate among these priests was five or six a year, and fifty per cent of those who devoted their years to apostolic labor in Mongolia were doomed to die of typhus and they know it—until the great discovery. Sixty years ago Rev. Father Verbist and his companions all died of typhus and ever since than the order has been searching for a remedy or a protective inoculation. This was discovered by a Polish scientist named Weigl, who permitted the Scheut fathers to send a medical assistant to his laboratories for study of his method. He in turn instructed Chinese doctors and from a laboratory in Peking the anti-toxin is provided which saves the lives of priests and nuns.

But the manufacture of vaccine is a costly and laborious process.

Thousands of live lice are bred in the laboratory in the Catholic University of Peking (founded by the American Benedictines, and now operated by the German Society of the Divine Word.) Each louse is inculated with typhus virus, known as Rickettsia. In a few days thousands of microbes are seen swarming in the intestines of the louse, who is then dissected and the poison extracted by means of a fine hypodermic needle. The germs are killed with carbolic acid and the resultant vaccine is then used as an injection for the creation of antibodies in persons to be protected. Many thousands lice are required for a single vaccination. But the infinite labor is justified, as no case of typhus has yet been discovered among the priests so treated. Now the medical missionaries are concentrating on discovery of a method which will yield larger quantities of vaccine for use among the tribesmen of Mongolia.

Many Scholar Missionaries

In Manchuria there are many notable scholars among the missionaries. All of them are linguists; they have to be. Rev. J. Miskelly of the Irish Presbyterians is a Sinologue of wide repute who is devoting his later years to apostolic translations. A Canadian priest, Rev. Father Jasmine is compiling a new Chinese dictionary. There are several very learned men among the French missionaries. Monsignor Lane of the Maryknoll Order speaks and preaches in Korean, Japanese and Chinese, and converses in French and some Italian, besides having his English and Latin. All his priests have one of Korean, Japanese or Chinese, sometimes two or all three. The Protestant missionaries speak Chinese with native fluency and I have heard one Irish Presbyterian pastor at Yingkou, who has a very large school system, addressing a convention and conducting its entire business for days at a time, wholly in Chinese.

But the field is extensive and the harvest yet small, for if the government records mean anything the Catholics have but 68,920 native believers and the Protestants 32,193 out of a population exceeding 30,000,000. The figures probably are excessively pessimistic, as I have seen crowded churches of all faiths in every part of Manchuria. If the records were faithful Manchuria would be shown up in a lurid light, for the Buddhists are credited with only 756,644, the Taoists 37,134, the Mohammedans, 151,198 and the Lamaists only 3,458 (this is ridiculous to anyone who has seen the Mongol nomads by their thousands acknowledging Lama spiritual direction). Thus there would little more than a million professing any sort of faith in a divinity.

There can be little doubt that the Christians are making great headway in Manchuria, and they are consolidating their gains by the instruction of a native ministry capable of carrying on and extending evangelical work. A tolerant attitude of the Japanese government towards Christianity may be accepted as a guarantee that religious freedom will be permitted to flourish and expand.

Loneliness is one of the greatest trials of missionary life here, yet the pastors find various ways to take their minds off their distance from home in Oregon or New York State. In a small South Manchurian town an American father has named his Chinese servant "Jeeves" in honor of Wodehouse's popular character. The young priest takes "Jeeves" into his confidence on most things and manages to build up chumship to relieve his nostalgia. In addition to providing Jeeves with all the Wodehouses mannerisms and a few words of his vocabulary, he has taught him several choice Americanisms, like "scram." Jeeves was told that "scram" is a polished term, meaning, "would you be kind enough to leave the room?" Recently the Bishop, Mgr. Raymond Lane, arrived with a small suite to administer confirmation. Jeeves came to the episcopal bedchamber next morning, entered after a discreet knock, and looking at the reverence in robes said, quietly but firmly, "scram." The bishop di'.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Greatest Fan In Showbusiness

Karl Friedrich, Count Hahn of Remplin, Germany (1732-1857), came into the possession of the huge family fortune amounting to $4,000,000 (equaling 20,000,000 of to day) at the age of 18. This fortune he immediately proceeded to squander on the theater, the consuming passion of his life. From the age of 18 to the evening of his death, night always found him either in, directing or attending a theatrical performance. He built an endless number of imposing theaters in many German localities. He furnished them in the most lavish manner possible and engaged, at fabulous salaries, the tsars of the great German theaters. He would often spend $6,000 for a single night's performance, at which the entire audience consisted of his solitaryself. After having squandered his fortune, he died in the theater at Altona, almost fulfilling his often expressed wish, that he might die on the stage.

bring up.

Later she marries no less a personage than a count and has another son. The two boys meet at the sea shore and the count's son is caught on a rock surrounded by high waves. The fisherman's boy tries to save him and both are drowned. When the two lads are brought home together Tamaki's cup of sorrow brims over and handkerchiefs are pressed to eyes in all parts of the audience. It must be confessed that the fiction of Meiji is not always well suited to modern audiences.

"Two Ways of Life" by the late Yeiichi Seto has for setting the geisha quarter and Kawai is seen in one of his favortie roles, a mature geisha. In this a new actor is introduced to the audience, the son of the playwright who is known by his father's name.

In conclusion, the Shimpa company gives "Bochan", the biography of Soseki Natsume's early years as a teacher. It has been adapted to the stage by Matsutaro Kawaguchi, and Shotaro Hanayagi takes the role of the school master. Since "Bochan" has been given repeatedly on the stage and has recently been made into a screen version, this repetition by the Simpa company does not prove of fresh interest to the audience.

PROFESSOR NEGISHI HONORED

Notice of the conferring of the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters upon Professor Yoshitaro Negishi of the English department of St. Paul's University was received Thursday. The degree was announced at the annual commencement ceremony of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee on June 11. Dr. Negishi is one of the well-known teachers of the English language in Tokyo and has a wide circle of friends both in the foreign community and in Japanese collegiate and business circles. He has been a professor of the English Language and English Literature in St. Paul's University since 1901.

Dr. Negishi is a native of Gumma prefecture where he was born at Maebashi on February 4, 1874. After completing his elementary education he spent several years in the old Maebashi Institute of Learning, studying Chinese Classics and English. He entered the then St. Paul's College, Tokyo in 1885. After completing the three-year course he entered Keio-Gijuku from which he graduated in 1891. Immediately after receiving his Keio degree, Dr. Negishi was appointed official translator and interpreter of theogoical lectures in the former Trinity Divinity School, which later merged in the present Central Theological College. For approximately 20 years Dr. Negishi acted as translator and interpreter of lectures given by such professos of Theology as the Rev. Joseph Marshall Francis, D. D., now Bishop of Indianapolis; the Rev. Dr. Davis of Nashota Theological Seminary on Ecclesiastical History; the Rev. Prof. Page on Pastoral Theology; the late Rev. Prof. Woodman on Old Testament Theology; the Rev. Prof. R. W. Andrews, Ph. D., on New Testament Theology; the Rev. James Chappel on Natural Religion; the late Rev. Prof. Tyng on Christian Evidences; the late Rev. Prof. Arthur Lloyd on Theology and the Rt. Rev. John McKim, D. D. on Church Liturgy. In 1901 Dr. Negishi was appointed Professor of English Language and Literature in St. Paul's College, a position which he still holds in St. Paul's University.

When the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Japan was established in 1931 as an autonomous member of the world-wide-Anglican order for laymen, Dr. Negishi was chosen its first National President which position he still holds. On the closing day of the Brotherhood's annual leadership training conference to be held next week at Seikei ryo on Lake Yamanaka, Dr. Negishi will review the first four years' history of the Brotherhood as his presidential address at the closing convention session. On July 25, Dr. Negishi will speak at the Karuizawa session of the Oriental Summer Cultural School and he will be one of the interpreters at the coming August sessions of the International New Education conference to be held at Tokyo Imperial University.

Quetta Disaster Shows Need For Supervision

dead. The maintenance of communications, particularly by rail, facilitated the work of rescue and enabled the large scale evacuation which followed to take place during the next few days.

Thereafter the control of the city passed to the hands of the military authorities, who collaborated with Sir Norman Cater, the Agent of the Governor-General in Baluchistan, in the work of rescue and evacuation. Four days were devoted to digging among the ruins during which time hundreds of Indians were rescued alive and thousands were buried or cremated. In addition, the military authorities undertook to feed, clothe, and give medical assistance to the stricken populace; while relief trains from various parts of the catastrophe. In less than a week more than 20000 Indians were evacuated to various parts of India, a temporary camp for permanent residents was established, emergency hospitals were created to deal with thousands of injured, and the routine life of a population of 20,000 was organized.

Future Safeguards

Quetta city had a varying population, its inhabitants increasing in the summer and dwindling in the winter. Many merchants migrated to the city each year for short periods, coming chiefly from Sind and the Punjab. When the earthquake demolished the city its immigrant population had not yet reached its peak, which is given in normal years as about 53,000. It is therefore thought that about 45,000 were asleep in the city when the disaster occurred. Several thousands still remain to form the nucleus of the prospective new city.

The appalling destruction in Quetta city is traced to the poor constructional quality of the buildings. Although Quetta was known to be in a serious earthquake zone, little appears to have been done in the city to counteract the devastation of earthquakes by sound building methods. In Japan, California, New Zealand, and other regions where earthquakes occur efforts have been made in recent years to avert the collapse of buildings by the erection of earthquake-proof structures; but Quetta with foreknowledge of its likely fate, appears to have neglected this safeguard. Such earthquake-proof buildings as had been built in the area survived the catastrophe. In the railway lines, where enormous damage was done and casualties were heavy, earthquake-proof buildings remained intact. Not even their chimneys fell.

Decade Of Unrest In Europe Is Seen

Noted Britons, In Symposium, Predict Political And Economic Upheavals

A decade of social unrest combined with political and economic upheavals is in store for Europe if the predictions of British sociologists, economists and scientists set down in a symposium that appeared in the June 9 edition of the Berliner Tageblatt should come to pass.

Their prophecies, published under the heading "Europe's Next Ten Years," envisage war, communism and economic revolution.

Europe's chances of escaping another war are not held any too favorable by H. G. Wells, and he predicts that its attendant pressure on the social and economic fabric will result in complete disorganization.

"The present decline in the freedom of intercommunication threaten to become still more actual, and it is quite conceivable that the world may yet experience a state of chaos similar to that recorded in Chinese history," he says.

Looks to the Aviators

"I believe, however, that modern science and technique will produce a large number of technical experts aviators and others—who some day will succeed in evolving a solidarity which will override purely national and political traditions. It is not improbable, in my opinion, that a dictatorship of aviators and technicians will emerge from convulsions and social liquidations."

More expert and more effective amalgamation of State control and private initiative in the realm of national economy is envisaged for the next decade by Sir Arthur Salter, economist. This readjustment, he believes, will result in an equitable balancing of industry and agriculture and a firmer stabilization of the price mechanism.

Such control, he says, would also extend to foreign trade and foreign credits and investments, which of necessity would then drop to a level below that existing before the outbreak of the world crisis.

This development, Sir Arthur continues, is bound to lead to essential modification of the traditional most-favored-nation principle in trade treaties and greater freedom in concluding such pacts through tariff easements and reciprocal accords.

In the realm of national currencies Sir Arthur envisages the evolution of a technique for provisional and conditional stabilization which would ultimately insure stability for longer periods. This provisional expedient, he adds, would eliminate risks and fears everywhere that certain States might seek to gain foreign trade benefits through currency manipulation. Such safeguards, he contends, would automatically protect States from compulsory recourse to deflationary practices.

Added Social Insecurity Seen

Science is represented in the Tageblatt's symposium by Professor J. B. S. Haldane, the Cambridge biologist, who expresses the belief that the continued projection of the sciences into the affairs of man is destined to increase social insecurity during the next ten years.

"The worker will constantly feel himself threatened with unemployment, the capitalist with inflation and both by weapons of aggression," says Professor Haldane.

The sinking of the standard of living may be anticipated in most States, the British scientist predicts, and he also foresees a measurable growth of communism except in those States where social legislation has adjusted itself to economic and political drifts. Continuing, he declares:

"It is most difficult to banish the thought of a European war within the next ten years, even if the adhesion of two major powers to the League of Nations holds out a promise that such a war may be prevented. That war would terminate in the dissolution of society rather than in military victories, and in all probability it would produce a communistic revolution in at least one participating State or group of States.

"Communism's future, therefore, would seem to be highly favorable, not because of any inherent merits but because the capitalistic nations apparently can only keep their populations employed through war and preparations for war. Meanwhile, I consider the outlook for religion and science extremely bad."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Number One Gunman

The lightning speed of old western stories and the more recent movies are as nothing compared to the speed of "Two Gun" Ed MacGivern when he whips his revolvers from their holsters. McGivern, whose home is Lewistown, Montana, has been a "gun toter" since childhood, and holds dozens of unofficial world's records for the machineun-like speed of his revolvers. But the most remarkable of his ballistic accomplishments was when, on January 23, 1934, timed by an electric timer, he shot five holes in a playing card at a distance of 12 feet with two 38 calibre revolvers, in 2-5ths of a second.

McGivern is an authority on ballistics, and many western criminal cases involving firearms have been solved as a result of his tireless efforts.

204,000 Bulletless Shots

Quite a contrast to "Two Gun" Ed McGivern, who has fired millions of bullets and seldom missed his mark, is John J. McHugh of New York City, who fires about 6,500 revolver shots every year and estimates he has fired at least 204,000 shots in 32 years, yet he has never fired a real cartridge. McHugh has been starter for running and track events since 1903 all over the country, and every national A.A.U. annual track meet for many years has found him as the official starter. His speed on the trigger is so highly regarded that an important track meet is hardly considered as such unless he is at the starting line.

DE MORAES MEMORIAL MEETING

Under the joint auspices of the Portuguese-Japanese Society of Japan and the Society for International Cultural Relations, a memorial meeting was held in honor of the Portuguese writer, Wenceslau de Moraes on Friday evening at the Meiji Seimei Kan Building, Marunouchi. Among the notables who attended were high officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Education. Dr. de Mello, Portuguese Minister to Japan delivered the following address:

"One needs faith: one needs belief. Those who have no faith cannot achieve or conquer and he who has no belief does not succeed in anything.

"I am sorry for those who at the beginning of their battle consider themselves already lost, and I pity those who have no faith in their own attempts, in their own impulses or in their own work. All those whose courage fails them are vanquished before the beginning of the fight.

"The Portuguese have never doubted themselves of their efforts and have always been at the vanguard.

"Allow me to remind you only two facts of so many events in our contemporary history in order to demonstrate that the Portuguese of the present day are the worthy sons of the warriors of the past ages who have left a glorious name in the world history.

"At the close of the last century, Mousinho d'Albuquerque at the head of only 53 Portuguese fought against the African King Gungunhana in command of an army of 2,000 and captured him

"During the battle of Coolela, also in Africa, the Officer Silva Porto, rather than surrender himself to his enemies, wraped himself around the Portuguese flag and sitting on a barrel full of gunpowder, blow himself up.

"Why did Wenceslau Jose de Sousa Moraes, an officer of the Portuguese Navy, and after sailing the four oceans, select this marvellous land of Japan as his home and his grave? Why?

"Because he saw with his own eyes that in Japan, as in Portugal, the brave warriors, the heroic descendants of the Samurai have marched forward on the way of their own achievements without faltering and have known also how to die for the Greater Glory of their Empire, keeping in every one of their wounds the hymn of a victory.

"Because he soon understood that in a land of such glorious history, he could have faith as in his own country, and this is the reason why his literary works are but a song to the beauty and the spirit of this land of Japan where he lived his last 30 years of life.

"Being in such a select company, as the people here assembled, I feel that it is not up to me to give any criticism of the writer's works, so that I will only fulfil the pleasant duty of greeting Their Excellencies the Ministers for Foreign Affairs, and of Public Education, the Minister of Japan at Lisbon, the Hon. members of the Cultural Societies, and the Professors and writers present at this meeting which may be well considered as another proof of the already well established Japanese-Portuguese friendship."

Brazilians Assail U.S. Trade Treaty

Sao Paulo Interests Argue Tariff Concessions Are Given To Competing Products

The Brazilian-American commercial pact, now before Congress, is expected to meet with some opposition before its final ratification or rejection.

Soon after the text of the agreement negotiated in Washington became known criticisms appeared in the press of both countries, both favorable and unfavorable. In the United States manganese interests criticized the entry of the Brazilian mineral free of duty into that country according to a Rio de Janeiro despatch on June 3 to the New York Times. In Brazil Sao Paulo industrial interests voiced their disapproval. Coffee interests remained silent.

In a formal complaint Sao Paulo industrial interests recently filed with the Federal Foreign Commerce Council charges that the treaty, as it read, was injurious to Brazilian industry. These interests requested that a representative committee be appointed by the government to study the treaty and render a report to Congress with recommendations. This petition was signed by manufacturers of radios, rubber goods, tinned products, paints, candies, iron, metals, etc. No figures were given to show to what extent the Brazilian tariff grant on American goods would injure the Sao Paulo industrial interests.

Refutation Is Offered

Two reasons appear to refute the Sao Paulo argument. One is that, because of the present exchange rate, importation of foreign merchandise into Brazil is almost impossible. The other is that under the Brazilian tariff even with the special tariff grant and a normal exchange American manufacturers cannot freely compete with organized Brazilian manufacturers since labor is much cheaper in Brazil than in the United States.

If, in spite of these conditions, the United States or any other country is able to sell here items which are also manufactured in Brazil, it is because the domestic supply is not adequate to the market demand.

A Sao Paulo critic of the treaty, writing in O Jornal, argued that the United States should have included other American products, such as cinema films, railway materials and items that the United States produces in large quantities and that they are not manufactured in Brazil. This writer declared that American automobiles, which represent the largest imports from the United States, rubber tires, sewing machines and industrial machinery should have received more attention from the treaty-makers and a bigger tariff reduction and this would have accomplished better results for American manufacturers without interfering with Brazilian industry.

Most of the products to receive tariff reductions, he says, are of small importance in American exports to Brazil, while those left out might increase United States exports to this country.

Another writer asserts that, while it is true that Brazil sells more to the United States than she buys from her, the profits derived by the United States from the industrialization of Brazilian raw materials and food products more than compensate and may even exceed the difference between sales and purchases. Under these conditions, he continues, "there exists no reason why the United States should ask for tariff reductions."

Favored-Nation Treatment

One clause grants to each other's commerce unconditional most-favored-nation treatment, extending this principle to the regulation of import trade, quotas and exchange control. The agreement will run for two years and will apply to the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico, excepting coffee exports to Puerto Rico.

The Commercial League today petitioned the government to revise its ruling of May 13 barring German payment for purchases of Brazilian products in compensated marks.

On the opening of the Cotton Exchange the day after the ruling, cotton took a fall of two milreis on arroba. Germany is the second largest buyer of Brazilian cotton. She purchased last year about 50,000 bales.

The ruling of the Federal Foreign Commerce Council was based on the fact that other countries paid for their Brazilian purchases in moneys of free international circulation which Brazil could use in payment for her own imports. It alleged that Germany, buying in compensated marks, a currency with circulation only in Germany, had a decided advantage over other countries. It is believed that other nations trading with Brazil protested against the German status.

German Benefits Listed

The advantages Germany derives from the Brazilian market are said to be as follows:

1. Due to the lack of available exchange, exporters from other countries than Germany are compelled to wait for the liquidation of their drafts, but Germans can liquidate immediately.

2. Dealing exclusively in compensated marks and claiming inability to trade in any other kind of money, Germany has piled up to date a £7,000,000 balance of trade in favor of Brazil in blocked marks which can only be thawed by trading between the two countries.

3. German banks bought in the Brazilian free exchange market millions of dollars, pounds, francs and other currencies of free international circulation in order to fulfill certain exchange requirements of the Bank of Brazil, thus further reducing the available supply of exchange and making it almost impossible to liquidate the import drafts of other nations.

4. German banks made as much as 25 per cent in the manipulation of German compensated marks.

5. Germany bought Brazilian products, cotton, coffee, etc., and resold them to other countries at lower prices than these countries could buy from Brazil, thus carrying out one of the objectives of the Schacht economic policy of bringing international free currencies into Germany.

Defenders of Policy Reply

Refuting these arguments, the defenders of German economic policy assert:

1. That the Germans pay better prices than other nations and Brazil should sell to the highest bidder, which is sound commercial business.

2. That, as far as the Brazilian seller is concerned, he does not care whether he is paid in dollars or sterling. Milreis are good enough for him.

3. That Brazil does not suffer by selling to Germany. If Germany cannot pay with gold coin she can pay in merchandise.

4. That Brazilian exporters profit more by selling cotton to Germany than to Britain, for instance, as Germany is able to pay higher prices.

Pressure is being brought to bear upon the government, especially by cotton growers, who are asking that the recent ruling be revised. The German Embassy is trying to induce Brazil to renew the agreement between the Bank of Brazil and the Reichsbank. Pressure is also noticeable from other quarters. It may be that Brazil will relent as far as coffee is concerned.

gested to the Germans that battleships of the future be limited to 25,000 tonnage and 12-inch guns and that cruisers be limited to 7,000 tons and 6-inch guns. In 1930, when the British tried to bring about such an agreement at London, the United States delegation refused flatly, we standing on the position we wished 35,000-ton battleships with 16-inch guns and 10,000-ton cruisers with 8-inch guns. It is a very good guess that the British have an understanding with the Germans by which Hitler will build no submarines if all other powers agree to the abolition of the undersea boat.

It is quite true that we may have in mind a good deal of new construction. It may also be true that we would not be adverse to the creation of a situation which would leave us in a position to add to our tonnage should we consider it advisable to meet Japanese building in that manner.

But it is also true that in a field where we once led there is going on a lot of negotiation in which our interests are both directly and indirectly involved. And, as far as can be seen, the United States is taking no part in it.

Angell Commends Trend Of Colleges

Yale President Tells Bryn Mawr Graduates Advance Of Work Has Great Promise

The current trend of the stronger preparatory schools to teach what was formerly college work and of colleges to advance the character of their work into the field of the graduate school was described as one which "has great promise" by Dr. James Rowland Angell, president of Yale University, at the annual commencement of Bryn Mawr College on June 5.

President Marion Edwards Park conferred the degree of Bachelor of Arts upon seventy-four candidates at the exercises in Goodhart Hall that morning, says the New York Times. The degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon nine candidates and that of Doctor of Philosophy on fourteen.

The Bryn Mawr European Fellowship, awarded annually to a member of the graduating class for excellence in scholarship, was awarded to Miss Elizabeth Monroe of New York City, who was graduated summa cum laude, with distinction in mathematics.

Miss Vung-Yuin Ting of Shanghai, China, in whose honor Dr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, the Chinese Minister, attended the ceremonies, was named alternate for the fellowship.

All Doors Opened to Women

Dr. Angell recalled the objections which were widely raised to the higher education of women at the time Bryn Mawr opened its doors and declared:

"In the ensuing half century it has been abundantly shown, both here and elsewhere, that advanced education as such has no untoward effect on women's health even if it cannot be safely combined with an active social career and that women are not unfitted by it for marriage, although they may well be rendered more critically discerning in the mates they accept for the matrimonial voyage.

"Unquestionably they are made less docile, for they are now fully aware of the vigor and integrity of their own thought processes, while the simultaneous opening to them of practically every door in the world of business, the professions and politics, has robbed them forever of any disposition to accept the male as an inevitably superior person."

Discusses "Progressive" Colleges

Dr. Angell discussed developments in the field of collegiate education, commenting on a number of changes which have occurred in recent years. He described the methods and objectives of the "progressive" colleges, and went on to say:

"My own interest is especially aroused by a trend which is as yet not widely in evidence, but which seems to have real vitality and to be progressing in a sufficient number of influential institutions to promise much for the future. I have in mind the tendency in our stronger preparatory schools to push their work up into the territory formerly the exclusive domain of the college, and the corresponding movement in the colleges to advance the quality and character of their work in the upper class years into the area previously occupied by the graduate school.

"I will not pause to comment critically upon the intellectual retardation of our youth compared year by year of age with our English and continental contemporaries. But, quite without regard to such comparisons, I welcome most sincerely the trend to which I refer as one which has great promise for the tone and temper of our whole educational system and one which every strong and ambitious college must be eager to promote."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Blind Luck

Although totally blind, Thomas McGraw, of Indianapolis, found a pocket book on the sidewalk in front of the Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, within plain sight of everyone but himself. McGraw was "feeling his way" from a newspaper office to his news-stand, a short distance away, and stepped on the wallet which contained $50. He reported his find to the newspaper officials, who arranged for him to keep it legally after the expiration of the waiting period prescribed by law.

Senators Assail Shipping Policy Of United States

ber, AGWI Navigaiton, New York and Cuba Mail, Roosevelt, International Mercantile Marine, Waterman, Red D, Gulf Pacific and other widely known marine interests.

In conclusion the committee presented three major proposals: Government ownership and operation; government ownership and private operation, or private ownership and operation; the last two under subsidies.

Three Methods Compared

"True government operation implies that the business is well conducted without hope or possibility of private individual profit and with complete government control of the wages, salaries, working conditions and activities of those employed therein," thte report said. "In such government operations, if there is profit it inures to the taxpayer and if there is loss it is borne by him.

"True private operation implies that private individuals supply the capital and operate and control the project for private profit, stimulated by hope of profit to operate frugally and efficiently.

"As between government ownership and operation and true private ownership and operation, your committee would favor the latter. As between true government ownership and operation and private ownership and operation by the government, your committee believes that government ownership and operation would best serve the interest of the people."

True government operation, the committee contended, had received only one real trial. The government had not operated any fleet except the United States Lines since 1920, it said, and after spending $5,565,327 for development and operation, actually showed a profit of $404,017 in 1927. During the same year, it was added, private operation of other government-owned lines cost the taxpayers $9,283,035, due to the widespread decline in maritime business conditions.

As to Use of Public Money

"The committee recommends that whenever the taxpayers' money is invested in ships or shipping enterprises, the government retain full and complete ownership and control," the report said.

"Your committee considers government ownership and operation preferable to any system involving subsidy. As between government ownership with subsidized private operation and true private ownership with subsidized private operation, your committee would unquestionably prefer the latter. Your of I. M. M. stock.

committee, however, does not believe that it is possible to bring about the latter system.

"Your committee recommends that whenever the taxpayers' money is invested in ships or shipping enterprises, unless it be considered (as we consider it) in the public interest to provide for government ownership and operation, the system adopted provide for government ownership with private operation, the operation to be subsidized where this is proved necessary."

Under the heading "Disregard for Law and Sound Public Policy by Administrative Officials," the committee said that when former Postmaster General Brown awarded subcontracts on mail routes to the United States Lines, Inc., in which the International Mercantile Marine had an interest, he held over 4,000 shares

Quintuplets' Fund $38,000, Dafoe Says

Doctor Asserts 'Other $100,000 Is Only A Castle In The Air'

About $38,000, not "half as much money as reported," has been accumulated through contracts for pictures, stories and endorsements for the Dionne quintuplets, Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, the Ontario physician to the famous babies, told the newspaper reporters of atlantic City at a luncheon in his honor at the Hotel Traymore on June 11.

"The other $100,000 is just castles in the air that will materialize only with the completion of various contracts," said Dr. Dafoe, who was in that city as a delegate to the American Medical and Canadian Medical Association's convention. He was interviewed by forty men and women at the luncheon table. "Practically all of these contracts contain a clause to the effect that it is void if one of the babies should happen to die," he explained.

"We don't want too much money. It would be bad for the youngsters in my opinion. All we need is a substantial amount to provide good living conditions and a good education for them."

Dr. Dafoe arrived in Atlantic City to receive the combined plaudits of both medical associations, says the New York Times. He said that already about $9,000 had been spent in construction and improvement of the little hospital where the children were being cared for and that in the near future another $8,000 would be used for an isolation ward and to enlarge the present quarters.

Dr. Dafoe was made an honorary member of the Canadian Medical Association. Dr. J. C. Meakins of Montreal, president of the association, made the presentation, which Dr. Dafoe accepted with a brief speech of appreciation.

Attack On Stirling Dropped By House

Action Follows Swanson Explanation That Admiral's Publication Was Privileged

A new demand for disciplinary action by the Navy Department against Rear Admiral Yates Stirling Jr., commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, for writing a newspaper article on warlike tendencies of Soviet Russia, was promised recently by Representative Marcantonio of New York, after the House had tabled his original resolution, says the New York Times Washington correspondent.

The latter had called upon the Navy Department to supply certain information concerning the writing of the article by Admiral Stirling, the amount of remuneration received therefor, whether the article was authorized by the author's superiors and whether the sums, if any, paid him were from "any provocative agent, munitions group, Fascists or shipbuilding combinations."

Secretary Swanson in a letter explaining the circumstances to Representative Vinson, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, and on the basis of which the resolution was tabled, said:

"The newspaper article by Rear Admiral Yates Stirling Jr., appearing in The Washington Herald Sunday, June 9, 1935, was not authorized by the Secretary of the Navy, or by any one delegated by him. It is not necessary for a naval officer to obtain advance authority to publish an article."

Swanson Quotes Rules

Secretary Swanson quoted in his letter from Article 113 of the Navy Regulations, as follows:

"Officers and other persons in the naval service desiring to publish articles on professional, political or international subjects, shall cause their signature to appear, together with a statement to the effect that the opinion or assertions contained therein are the private ones of the writer and are not to be construed as official or reflecting the views of the Navy Department or the naval service at large.

"Immediately upon acceptance of such articles for publication the writer will forward a complete copy thereof to the Secretary of the Navy for the files of the Navy Department."

One Navy Department official, who would not permit his name to be used, said the requirement that articles be submitted in advance and published with the author's statement that it represented his own private views was one of the most regidly enforced of all naval regulations.

This official agreed that the Stirling article as it appeared in print contained no such statement, but suggested that it might have been edited out prior to publication. On this point the letter of Secretary Swanson stated:

"Rear Admiral Yates Stirling Jr. did not ask for nor did he receive the consent of any of his superior officers or the Secretary of the Navy to publish said article. It should be stated here that it is not necessary for a naval officer to ask for and receive the consent of any one before publishing an article.

Stirling's Reply Is Recorded

"Rear Admiral Stirling has been communicated with the telephone and has replied as follows:

"'In writing similar articles for Hearst newspapers the usual compensation has been $150. I expect that compensation for the article of June 9 will be the same. Check has not yet been received for this article. Such total payment as I may receive will be from the King Features Syndicate, Inc. No payment will be received from any other source.'"

Representative Marcantonio said he had no quarrel with the Navy Department and was entirely willing that his resolution be tabled, inasmuch as the information it requested had been supplied by the Secretary.

He insisted, however, the Article 113 of the regulations had been violated by Admiral Stirling and that he would call upon the department on Monday to show whether any disciplinary action had been taken against him.

"If this had been done by an enlisted man he would have been promptly disciplined," Mr. Marcantonio shouted from the weel of the House. "But just because it was by a stuffed shirt, pompous, jingoistic admiral nothing has been done about it."

A resolution by Representative Scott of California, demanding not only an investigation of the circumstances surrounding the writing of the article by Admiral Stirling but his dismissal from the service if the regulations had been violated, is still pending before the Rules Committee.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Eight Trees in One

An unique tree on the campus of Hillman College, Clinton, Mississippi, bears cherries, blackberries, acorns, pecans, walnuts and chinaberries, all from the same trunk. It is a venerable old chinaberry tree, mothering the other species, all of which are unreplanted trees. Presumably, in bygone years, the old tree was damaged, and decay set in. Then the seeds of cherries, blackberries, etc., were planted in the rich decayed wood, and they readily took root. All the trees are growing healthily, each being loaded with fruit in its season.

The Strangest Englishman

Among the Japanese story tellers (hanasika), the most famous and versatile is George Black, a mysterious Englishman, who came to Japan about 30 years ago. He married a Japanese woman, by whom he has several children. He has given up all European habits, become naturalized as a Japanese citizen and selected the most Japanese of all trades. Only those who have tried to master the most difficult of all languages can appreciate how he must have worked and studied to achieve the perfection which is his stock in trade. He handles his adopted language with the ease of a scholarly virtuoso and his recitals are nightly attended by the largest crowds of any "yose." Black has preserved the deepest silence over his European past, the accidents and the vicissitudes that have impelled this highly intelligent Englishman to become completely absorbed in an alien civilization.

Grace Moore Calls Off Recital For Belgian King

Grace Moore, who does not "expect to have another vacation in three years," canceled her scheduled appearance before the King and Queen of the Belgians at Brussels on June 18 on doctor's orders because she was "very tired."

The American singer, expressing surprise at rumors that the concert had been canceled because of difficulties over the Royal acceptances, said she had merely postponed her appearance until next year when she would start her European tour at Brussels, says the New York Times.

"It wasn't a Grace Moore evening," she explained, "as I was only one of many performers on the program, which was arranged for charity. It was not a command performance."

Social and Personal Notes

38TH TRIP TO JAPAN

Mr. D. F. Robertson, Los Angeles tourist agent who has been in the business for 40 years and who was one of the first to believe there was money in escorting tourists around the world, is in Tokyo on his 38th trip to Japan.

It was 40 years ago that he organized his first tour, a European tour and the members of the party crossed the Atlantic on the old American liner, "City of Chester," 4,800 tons.

Those were the days when first class passengers were quite content with oil lamps for illumination while steerage passengers had to bring their food from a board.

Mr. Robertson himself travelled steerage at that time and he says it was the foundation for many economies for he learned the hardships in travel.

Since then he has organized hundreds of tours to Europe and the Orient and around the world and he has booked more than 10,000 patrons.

At present he is heading a party of 25 tourists although there are now more than 100 American tourists in Japan under the auspices of his travel agency. The others are being escorted by lesser lights than Mr. Robertson.

Of the Orient, Mr. Robertson has this to say:

"In the last five years the tide of interest among Americans has been shifting from Europe to the Orient. The amount of travel to the Orient this year will be the heaviest in history.

"Regardless of the talk of jingoists, and those who hope to make profits out of war, the American people—the plain people—have a great friendliness for the people of Japan and believe in the sincerity of the Japanese people. To them any thought of war between two such friendly nations, with no fundamental controversies between them, is absolutely absurd. Hotels in Japan are equal and in many cases superior to European hotels.

"Travel in China is still primitive, but the discomfort is well compensated in visiting Peiping and the great wall.

"Singapore, India Penang, Ceylon and Arabia are all under the British flag, which means protection for all nations, good roads, good hotels, no baggage examinations, visas or duties. This makes shopping a delight, especially to women. Fast improvements have been made on the Indian railroads and hotels, and there is no animosity by the natives toward English speaking people, but on the contrary, tourists are welcome everywhere.

"In Egypt, Palestine and the Holy Land hotels are good, but expensive, and in this part of the world there are more beggars to the square inch than in any other place."

Mr. Robertson's party left the Imperial hotel today for Chosen, Manchoukuo, Peiping, Shanghai, Hongkong, an dManila. Members will return to Japan August 14 to spend 9 days here. They will sail from Yokohahma on August 22 on the N.Y.K. liner Tatsuta Maru.

U.S. PRESIDENT HONORED

A memorial service honoring General Ulysses S. Grant, 18th president of the United States, will be held on Tuesday, July 23, the 50th anniversary of his death, at the Grant Monument in Ueno park.

General Grant once visited Tokyo and such firm friendships did he leave that the monument was erected to his memory. The ceremony next Tuesday will be held at 9:30 a.m. and will be under the auspices of the Tokyo Municipality and the America-Japan Society. Prominent Tokyo citizens and government officials will attend the function.

National anthems of Japan and America will be sung and wreaths will be laid on the memorial. Addresses will be given by Mr. E. L. Neville, counselor at the American Embassy, Mayor Toratare Ushizuka, and Prince Iyesato Tokugawa. The ceremony, which is expected to last 30 minutes, will be held regardless of weather.

THRIFT SHOP SALE

Mrs. J. D. Hitch Jr., will open her Karuizawa home Friday morning for the sale of articles from the Tokyo Thrift shop. Among the articles to be shown will be hooked rugs made by Kobokan workers, bridge and luncheon sets and paper napkins in all sizes and shapes, some with initials. Those wishing to dispense with "white elephants" on a commission basis may leave their articles at Mrs. Hitch's home on Thursday morning. The residence is No. 861.

KARUIZAWA ARRIVALS

Among the recent arrivals at Karuizawa are Dr. and Mrs. L. E. Butler, No. 2330 and Mr. and Mrs. R. D. McCoy, 1279.

TO OPEN BESSO

The besso of Mr. Heihachiro Kume in Hayama will be opened Sunday for the summer season and members of the family will be there at intervals during the season.

TO SUMMER HOME

Mr. and Mrs. Iwajiro Yasuda and family will leave for their summer home in Kamakura Monday. They will remain there until September.

TO SAIL FRIDAY

Mr. and Mrs. M. Kawasaki will leave Friday on the Empress of Japan for a short visit in Canada and the United States en route to England and France. They expect to be away about three months.

COUNT TERASHIMA RETURNS

Count Muneyori Terashima returned Tuesday on the N.Y.K. liner Chichibu Maru from the United States. He has graduated from Princeton University this June. Count Terashima spent eight years in the United States, having prepared for Princeton at the Lawrenceville prep school. His Tokyo home is at Hirakawacho, Akasaka.

SUMMER VISITORS

Dr. and Mrs. H. Meyers of Kobe are now at their summer home in Karuizawa where they have as their summer guest, their daughter, Mrs. George Dickely who is here from the United States. Their son-in-law, Mr. Dickely who is spending the early part of this week with them, will sail Friday on the President Hoover for the United States.

ART EXHIBITIONS

An exhibition of Japanese subjects, landscapes, and portraits by Max Hinder is being held at the German Asiatic Society headquarters, Kojimachi-ku, Hirakawa-cho 2 chome 7. The display is open to visitors from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day and it will continue one week. Mr. Hinder is a member of the "Heimat," Tirol, artists' club. In addition to his work, the exhibition also includes 22 drawings by S. Schrom, member of the same club. They are entitled, "The War."

J.A.A. EXCURSION

The 23rd excursion of the Japan Automobile Association will be held Sunday, July 21. The destination will be Katagai beach at Kujuukurigahama. The party will assemble at Toranomon and leave at 8:30 a.m.

The committee in charge will arrange to have a drag net laid for fishing on the previous day and facilities for cooking the fresh fish in any style preferred, will be made for the visitors. Cooked rice will also be supplied.

Those planning to take the trip are asked to bring their own plates, dishes, bowls and seasoning materials.

Sea bathing will be enjoyed until 5 p.m. when the party will leave for Tokyo.

Members are urged to take the trip and to include their families. Reservations are asked by the committee before noon Saturday. In case of rain, the trip will be postponed without further notice.

Viscount M. Inada is the organizer of the excursion and Mr. S. Shirai, telephone (43) 0775, is the secretary of the foreign section.

NO RECEPTION

There shall be no reception at the Colombian Legation on July 20, the occasion of the National Fete of Colombia, as the Minister, Mr. Esguerra, will be absent from Tokyo on that day.

ROADS DAMAGED

Owing to the recent heavy rain in the Kansai, the motor road and bridges between Kobe, Osaka and Kyoto to Karuizawa have been destroyed and it is quite impossible to drive between these places. It is said that repairs will be made in one or two weeks.

DINNER DANCE

The first dinner dance in Karuizawa will be held at the New Grand Lodge on Saturday the 20 from 7 p.m. Saturday evening dance will be continued till the end of this season. During July music will be furnished by records.

Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Fesperman, Mr. J. Fesperman and Miss C. Fesperman of Sendai are living in cottage number 5.

The mayor of the community, Mr. Oscar Stoudt, his wife, and Miss B. Stoudt and Messrs. J. and K. Stoudt of Sendai are in cottage 6.

Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Luthy of Sendai and their sons live in cottage 4.

In cottage 10 Mrs. F. D. Gealy of Tokyo and her sons are residing.

Mrs. H. Barton and children are occupying cottage 13. They are from Tokyo.

Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Garman, Miss M. Wordsworth and Miss Margaret Garman are living in cottage 14.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Gressett, Miss F. Gressitt and Miss J. Okazaki of Tokyo are in cottage 15.

Mrs. M. Edinger of Tientsin, China and her children are in cottage 18. They were some of the first residents of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. George Nass and daughters of Aomori opened cottage 26 on July 13.

Mr. and Mrs. George Marshall of Tokyo are occupying cottage 27.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Gerhard of Sendai have moved into their new home which they have decorated in a truly charming manner. They gave house warming tea parties on July 6 and 7 and had Mr. and Mrs. P. Gerhard as house guests. On July 13, Miss Sato, Miss Endo and Miss Sakuma were their guests.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Samott of Tokyo and children are occupying number 31.

Mr. and Mrs. I. Fisher and small son are living in cottage 32.

Mrs. D. Holtom of Yokohama and Mr. D. Holtom Jr., Mr. J. Holtom and Mr. K. Tsunoda are in number 33.

Mrs. Glen Babb and children live in cottage 36. They are from Tokyo.

Mrs. David Tait and children of Tokyo live in number 37.

Mrs. D. Squires and son of Shanghai occupy cottage 45. With her are Mr. and Mrs. C. Lunt and sons, Miss Bud and Miss Austin of Shanghai.

Mrs. T. D. Walser, Miss M. Walser and Mr. D. Walser are in cottage 50.

Miss M. Garman, Miss H. Smith and Miss D. Harold spent the week end of July 5 at the Garman cottage.

Miss Georgia Newbury and Miss Margaret Garman gave a party on July 6 as a farewell for Miss Dorothy Hittle and Miss Donna Hanold. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. P. Gerhard, Mr. and Mrs. R. Gerhard, Mr. and Mrs. F. Fesperman, Mr. J. Fesperman, Miss H. Boyle, Miss K. Hansen, Miss H. Smith, Miss G. Gray and Mr. D. Zoll.

Stratosphere Hop To Be Radio Test

Balloon Will Carry Ultra Short-Wave Transmitters In Big Experiment

A short-wave radio experiment, characterized as one of the most elaborate studies in wireless communications yet to be attempted, it was revealed recently forms one of the important objectives of the National Geographic-Army Air Corps stratosphere flight to be made from a canyon in the Black Hills when it makes its next trip.

The world's largest balloon, Explorer II, flown by Captains A. W. Stevens and Orvil A. Anderson of the Air Corps, carrying more than a ton of delicate instruments in its spherical gondola, will not, however, get away until it is repaired following the accident on July 12.

Led by Captain Stevens, the scientists, gathered in the camp from universities and research foundations all over the country, continued to test their various instruments, prior to the accident. The radio research workers concentrated on a trial of their ultra short-wave transmitters and receivers.

Project of Wide Interest

This particular project has attracted wide interest. Conceived by Captain Stevens himself, all preparations are being made by Harry Diamond, research radio engineer for the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. Diamond had charge of developing the bent radio landing beam for the Bureau of Air Commerce, which has found favor with a number of the country's larger air lines.

To carry out the present project, the Bureau of Standards has enlisted the aid of research institutions, commercial radio companies, wireless amateurs and government agencies all over the United States.

Two transmitters, one with a wave-length of 2.7 meters and the other with a wave-length of 5.4 meters, each sending out an automatic signal, are to be carried on a cable hanging 200 feet below the gondola.

Experiments in the ultra short-wave have developed characteristics almost freakish, Mr. Diamond explained today. Certain features act much like light waves. They appear to be limited in range by the horizon, traveling in a straight line, save for the curve lent to them by refraction.

Just what this refraction amounts to the scientists do not yet know. Ross Hull, an experimenter of Hartford, Conn., has discovered an interesting phenomenon which may prove eventually of great practical value according to Mr. Diamond.

Range Depends on Weather

The range of these ultra-short waves appear to be controlled in part by meteorological conditions, the best transmission being obtained when a cold mass of atmophere lies close to the earth with a warm, moist zone in the higher altitudes, a condition directly preceding storms.

So sensitive have been the reactions that meteorologists are now speculating on the possible use of science of air-mass analysis for long-ultra short-wave radio as a fact-finder in the recently developed range weather forecasting.

This particular bit of research, however, is only one of a number of features of interest in this experiment. The Federal Communications Commission, pressed on all sides for allotments of wave-length channels, is hoping to get help in adding to the number of its shortwave channels.

Both the Army and the Navy are seeking new channels of their own. The Bureau of Air Commerce wants more channels for aviation and the commercial companies are eager for the same advantages.

All are cooperating in this particular test. Without a great deal of hope of catching the signals, receiving stations have been set up as far north as Mount Washington, N. C.; as far south as Fort Worth and at various points from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Receiving Station Here

They will all be tuned in at two and seven-tenths meters and five and four-tenths meters throughout the flight of the balloon. G. W. Pickard of Boston will be perched on Mount Washington, receivers to his ears. Engineers for Mackay Radio will be listening in New York and San Francisco.

Students and professors at the University of Nebraska will have an elaborate set-up at Lincoln, General Electric engineers will be listening at Schenectady and the Bureau of Standards will have listeners at Rapid City.

Besides, the Bureau of Air Commerce will have several stations manned with radio engineers, and both army and navy radio men will be on the job at widely scattered points.

While it is expected that only a small proportion of these stations will hear the signals from the balloon as it wanders about on the winds of the stratosphere, every effort has been made to keep track of the direction, distance and intensity of these ultra-short waves.

SENDAI NEWS

The Rev. Kenneth Perkins of St. Andrews Cathedral of Honolulu visited Sendai recently as the guest of the Rev. and Mrs. Hunter Lewis. He is on his way to England where he has been awarded a fellowship in London University.

Miss Dorothy Hittle of the American Church Mission left Sendai Monday on her furlough. She will travel to the States by way of ports making an extensive tour of Egypt and the Holy Land.

Mrs. T. D. Walser, her daughter Margaret and her son Demarest stopped in Sendai on their way to Takayama and they were guests at dinner at the home of Mr. Donald Zoll.

The Bunka Kinema has ceased operations pending the construction of a new theater building which is reputed to be at a cost of ¥200,000. It will be a three storied building with a seating capacity of 900. The theater was crowded at its last performance last Wednesday, which was the presentation of "Blossom Time" and "La Chanson de l' Adieu."

'Black Light' Aids Heart Treatment

Doctors Find Infra-Red Films Detect Cardiac Troubles In An Early Stage

Photographs taken in pitch darkness by "black light," which reveal the existence of conditions of heart disease before they can be detected by other means, at a time when measures can be taken to forestall the oncoming of a possibly fatal heart attack, were on display at the scientific exhibit of the joint meeting of the American and Canadian Medical Associations, held in June at Atlantic City, N. Y.

The "black pictures" are a new application for medical use of the infra-red sensitive films developed a little more than a year ago by the Eastman Kodak Company. With these films a picture can be taken in absolute darkness by the "black light," or heat waves, emitted by a hot electric flatiron, according to the New York Times. The infra-red heat rays take the place of ordinary light.

The new technique was developed by Drs. Albert S. Hyman, Harry J. Lowen, Charles Hertzman, Emil Klein, J. Sante Diasio and Maurice Zimmerman of the Witkin Foundation for the Study and Prevention of Heart Disease, Beth David Hospital, New York City.

These black rays, unlike light, penetrate a quarter of an inch below the skin and photograph the blood vessels near the surface. If a condition of congestion exists in these veins, a sign of oncoming heart disease, the black pictures will reveal the condition earlier than can be done under present diagnostic methods. In one case these vein pictures revealed the possibility of a heart attack four months before it could be detected by the ordinary symptoms.

A device that enables one actually to see and read with the eyes tightly closed was demonstrated at the exhibit before hundreds of physicians, who insisted that "seeing is believing," by Dr. A. Howard Pirie of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal.

Crowds of fascinated physicians flocked at Dr. Pirie's exhibit space, the legend above which reads as follows:

"Reading and seeing pictures with eyes closed: demonstration of apparatus allowing spectators to read and see pictures with eyes closed."

Dr. Pirie's apparatus is based on his discovery that X-rays, contrary to hitherto prevailing belief, can be seen by the human eye.

Skeptical physicians pressed their closed eye against an eye-cup socket in front of the X-ray tube. To their amazement the word "the" in large black letters against a greenishblue background flashed before them as though they had their eyes wide open. Then they saw the picture of a house with a tree along-side it.

Certain Aspects Lacking

There are only two differences between seeing and reading with eyes wide open and doing so with eyes closed. In the latter form there are no means of judging either size or distance. Nor is it possible to see colors.

The letters and pictures are made opaque to the X-ray by painting them with a solution of collidal lead. The X-rays, of the soft, less penetrating type, penetrate through the blank areas of the screen, which is placed between the observer and the X-ray tube, pass through the closed eyelid and strike the retina of the eye, upon which it acts in the same manner as ordinary light rays. The lead-painted surfaces, through which the X-rays cannot penetrate, are thus outlined before the eye as though the lid were open.

Theoretically the device could be used for reading books and newspapers in the dark, but this would be highly dangerous as prolonged exposure of the delicate eye tissues to X-rays would result in irreparable damage.

The device, however, was not made by Dr. Pirie as a mere stunt. He is using it in detecting the location of foreign bodies lodged in the eye and to determine whether a damaged condition exists in the retina.

Dr. Pirie demonstrated this phase of the work before his fellow physicians by placing a small piece of lead, by means of adhesive tape, on the outside of the closed eye. The subjects in these tests were able to see the lead as a black spot on the screen and were also able to tell its location on the eye.

Patients with foreign objects in their eyes or with demaged retinas, Dr. Pirie explained, are similarly able to see and locate the damaged point in their own eye.

A "suicide preventor," a method of checking the fatal effects of bichloride of mercury, was demonstrated by Dr. Sanford M. Rosenthal of the National Institute of Health in Washington. Dr. Rosenthal has used his method on twenty-nine attempted suicide cases and saved twenty-six.

The Old Chopping Block

Harmand David, a native of Richemond, France, was born in 1750, and died in 1860 at the age of 110. When he died, he was the oldest man in Paris and the last of the soldiers who had served in the army of Louis XV. David enlisted at a very early age, and continued to serve under the last King of France, and under the Revolutionary, Republican and the Napoleonic regimes.

After Waterloo, the old soldier, aged 65, was finally retired with pension of 165 francs a year ($33). In nearly half a century of continuous military service, he took part in 90 battles, was shot in the chest 12 times, sabred 20 times, struck by shells 8 times, and his life was despaired of by doctors 20 times. But all that did not prevent him from enjoying perfect health and full use of all his faculties for the last 45 years of his life. The centenarian increased his income by manufacturing hand rests for shaky painters, and took pride in the fact that he never needed one for himself.

The Eyeglass Range

The range of lenses from which an eye specialist may select two for a patient, has been arrived at by multiplying the number of sphere cylinder lenses by the number of positions of the cylinder axis. To the product of this multiplication, (160,280) are to be added 2,016 plane cylinders and 80 sphero lenses, making the total 162,376. This figure must in turn be multiplied by 1,440 positions and powers of prism, yielding a product of 233,821,440 lenses. The latter figure squared, to do justice to the diversity of the lenses in a single pair of spectacles, represents a possible total of 54,672,465,803,673,600 different lenses, from which an eye specialist may choose to prescribe for an individual patient. Taking into account different eye sizes, lens shapes and combinations of double spheres, this figure could be tremendously enlarged.

Social and Personal Notes

SAILED TODAY

Passengers on Board the N. Y. K. liner Hikawamaru which left Yokohama at 3 p.m. today for Seattle via Vancouver included:

Mr. Otoichi Kinoshita, general manager of the Society for the Promotion of Japanese Trade; Mr. and Mrs. Shinichiro Iwamoto; Mr. and Mrs. Nobuaki Noma, president of the Seto Naikai Steamship Co.; Messrs. Shintaro Kobuse and Kojiro Kofuse, Mr. Gintaro Muto, dealer in provisions;

Dr. Yumitsuru Kako, director of the Kako Hospital; Mr. Shiro Kawaminami, attache of the Imperial Consulate at Vancouver, and his family; Mr. Tomohiro Katagiri of the Katagiri Co. in New York; Messrs. Katsuo Matsuo and Teruo Ota of Yokohama Specie Bank.

Miss Matsuyo Omori; Mr. Raisaburo Uchida, trader; Mr. and Mrs. Komajiro Matsuda, merchant; Messrs. Masatoku Amano, Yasuzo Kumagai, and Etsuji Taji; Miss Toku Kameda.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Espy, of the Garden Club Party of America; Miss Ledman, Missionary; Miss Douglas, Missionary; Mr. L. C. Lake. Mrs. W. E. Wheeler, Mrs. T. Tsukui, Miss G. O. Berman, Mr. John Emery, Merchant; Mr. E. M. Bell, Student.

Miss Cook, Missionary; Miss Sandler, Missionary; Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Gole and child; Mrs. Mabel Rankin, Miss Florence Tsukui, Mr. W. I. McCarthy, Marine Engineer and Mr. D. G. Clark.

WIN PROMOTIONS

Mr. Chimaki Fujino, assistant manager of the Yokohama branch of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, has been appointed manager of the N.Y.K. Los Angeles branch.

Mr. Kuse Higashi, chief of the imports and exports section of the branch office, has been appointed acting manager of the New York office. Both men are expected to sail on the Chichibu Maru on August 8 to assume their new duties.

FUNERAL SERVICES

Funeral services for Major-General Kiichi Tanaka and Lieutenant Seishiro Utayo of the Fifth Regiment of the Tachikawa Army Air Corps, who were killed in a plan crash Monday, were observed at the hangar of the Regiment at 3:00 p.m. Wednesday in accordance with Buddhist rites. The services, performed under the auspices of the Fifth Regiment, were attended by members of the families of the deceased, H.I.H. Prince Asaka, representative of the War Minister, and all the officers and men of the Regiment.

DEATH ANNOUNCED

Word of the death of the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Fowler of St. Paul's University, has been received in Tokyo. The child, Margaret, died July 15 in Boston where her parents took her for medical treatment. They left Tokyo last February.

AT HAYAMA

Mr. and Mrs. Willard Price are spending the summer at Shimoyama, Hayama.

HOUSE GUESTS

Mrs. James Russell of Karuizawa has Mrs. Florence Newall, Miss Faulkner and Miss Lord who recently arrived in Japan on a trip from the United States, as her house guests. Miss Faulkner is the head of Milton Academy, Milton, Mass., while Mrs. Newall is house mother there. Miss Lord is the head of the Windsor School in Boston.

STEAMER ARRIVAL

Canadian Pacific s.s. "Empress of Canada" sailed from Vancouver on Saturday, July 13th and is expected to arrive at Yokohama via Victoria and Honolulu on Saturday, July 27th.

FAREWELL PARTY

Mr. J. G. Parsons of the American Embassy who is leaving for the United States Friday, was the guest of honor at a cocktail party given by the American Vice Consul and Mrs. J. M. Allison Tuesday.

AT FAMOUS PARK

Miss Dorothea E. Trott is spending the summer vacation at Oonuma Park, well known resort in Hokkaido.

AT NIKKO

Mr. Georges G. Stoicesco, Charge d'Affaires at the Rumanian legation, is at the Kanaya hotel, Nikko.

TEACHERS PARTY

Members of the Columbia University Teachers' College party which is now touring Japan, will be in Karuizawa Saturday. A tea party will be held in their honor at the Karuizawa hotel from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. Although no invitations are being issued, members of the summer colony are urged to attend the functions as the party, headed by Dr. and Benjamin Andrews are going to Karuizawa especially to meet the summer residents. Mrs. J. V. Martin will assist as hostess.

AT SUMMER RESORT

Mrs. C. V. Hibbard who is in Japan to visit her daughter, Miss Esther Hibbard, is now the guest of Mrs. G. S. Phelps in Karuizawa. She will join her daughter at Nojiri later. Miss Hibbard is a teacher at Doshisha University.

SUMMER GUESTS

Dr. and Mrs. D. Norman at No. 2073 Karuizawa have as their summer guests Mr. Marshall of Formosa and Dr. Edgar Otsu.

SUMMER SCHOOL BEGINS

The Karuizawa Junior Summer School will reopen Monday July 22. Registration which began today will continue through Saturday. New this year is the division of the Intermediate group into two classes, one for those from 8 to 11 and the other for those from 11 to 14. In the older groups there will be separate classes for boys and girls. Mrs. E. A. Rhodes is head of the junior activities. The fee for each student is 4 yen.

AT KARUIZAWA

Mrs. Rudolph Bolling Teusler, Mrs. Landon Funsten, Miss Mildred Teusler, and Mr. Rudolph Bolling Teusler have arrived at Karuizawa and are at No. 2075.

KARUIZAWA GUEST

Mr and Mrs. Henry Topping, No. 1031 Karuizawa, have as their guest Mrs E. H. Fisher of Yokohama.

KARUIZAWA ARRIVALS

Post Office registrations at Karuizawa on July 17th include: Mr. Arestes Pletner at No. 1308, Miss D. A. Parr at 1130, Dr. Stedefelt at No. 1150, Mr. Teusler at No. 2075, Mr. Arthur Thorne at No. 2075, Mr. C. Irwin at No. 1075, Mrs. Robert McClelland at No. 710, Mr. H. R. Show at No. 1421, Mr. G. Strauss To Lose Nazi Music Post

Will Be Retired As President Of Chamber Because He Had A Jew Write Libretto

Richard Strauss, Germany's most distinguished composer of opera and lieder, appeared likely to be ousted soon as president of the Third Reich's Musical Chamber. He was appointed to the office by Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda on Nov. 15, 1933.

Nazi circles make no secret of the fact that Strauss, son and grandson of famed musicians, will be retired soon after the world premier of his latest opera, "The Silent Woman," at Dresden, June 24, because he had Stefan Zweig, Jewish author, write the libretto for it, according to the New York Times.

Hitherto Strauss had usually used librettos by the late Hugo von Hofmannsthal, another "non-Aryan," for his works. His "Elektra," "Der Rosenkavalier," "Ariadne," "Woman Without Shadow" and "Arabella" all had texts by Von Hofmannstahl.

Nazi leaders fully expected that Strauss would turn to Gentile librettists after von Hofmannstahl's death, but Strauss insisted that Zweig's paraphrase of Ben Jonson's "Epicoene, or The Silent Woman" was exactly what he needed for his next opera.

A story told in Wilhelmstrasse circles is to the effect that Dr. Goebbels, meeting Strauss at the concert Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler gave for Sir John Simon and Anthony Eden during th Britons' visit to Berlin in March, told him this his "Silent Woman" would be the last new opera by a Jewish librettist to be permitted in Nazi Germany.

"But it isn't easy to find librettists," Strauss was said to have replied. "Writing opera text is a special art."

General Hermann Wilhelm Goering, the Air Minister, who overheard the conversations and who does not share Dr. Goebbels's violent anti-Semitism, reputedly patted Strauss on the shoulder and said, glancing at Goebbels:

"Well, Herr Strauss, you are now 70. By the time you reach your 100th birthday you'll have a gentile librettist, all right."

Strauss, observers recalled, has tried hard to adapt himself to Nazism, even forsaking his colleague, Wilhelm Furtwaengler, when that famed conductor incurred to displeasure of the Nazi regime.

However, Strauss's position was rendered difficult by the fact that his son married a wealthy Jewish girl, and the composer himself, it is said, often used to stay with Jewish friends while visiting Dressden and Berlin as guest conductor.

Invitations issued for the Dresden premiere named Strauss as composer but did not give the name of the librettist for "The Silent Woman."

Heavy Industry Production Up 25 PC In Russia

Steady Progress Characterizes Major Portion Of Soviet Economic Picture

Steady progress characterizes the major portion of the Soviet economic activities these days.

During the first five months of 1935 production in heavy industry showed an increase of more than 25 per cent over the corresponding period of last year, says Mr. Ralph Wi Barnes Moscow correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune.

For example, the output of steel ingots for the period has increased 31.5 per cent; pig iron, 24.5 per cent copper, 67.5 per cent and aluminum 99 per cent. Coal lags behind the average with a production increase of only 12.8 per cent and oil production, with an increase of 2.6 per cent, is almost stationary.

Light industry is increasing, with the result that there is a steadily increasing supply of consumers' goods in shops. The change in this respect is noticeable, especially in Moscow, but to a lesser degre also in the provinces. With goods becoming more plentiful prices are dropping and the paper ruble is gradually appreciating in value. In turn there is a noticeable decrease of foreign currency for purchases made with "valuta" at the "Torgsin," or foreign currency shops.

In all industries increasing attention is being paid to quality. With the bulk of workers on a piece-work basis the "norms" have been reduced to encourage the worker to take a greater care with his work. A campaign is under way to place each industry and each plant on a self-supporting basis and even to encourage the creation of surpluses.

A number of the heads of the trusts and individual plants have reported to the Commissariat of Heavy Industry that this year they can do without part—in some cases the whole—of subsidies they have been allocated. A few plants even promise considerable surpluses by the end of the year.

Meanwhile, progress in gold production continues. For the last five months the output is 32.4 per cent greater than for the corresponding period of last year. The gold producton of 1934 was close to 150,000,000 gold rubles. If the present rate of increase is maintained, production for the current year will exceed 200,000,000 gold rubles.

Crop Prospects Favorable

Although industry occupies an increasingly important place in the Soviet scheme of things, agriculture still plays the dominant role. This year crop conditions have been good. Planting was done better than last year, and on an average of ten days or so earlier—a favorable factor. Following substantial modifications based on sad experience, the collective farm system appears to be working somewhat better than in the past. However, credit is to be divided between nature and man. Reports from the majority of the principal grain-growing regions are highly favorable, and the general forecast is for a first-rate crop. Agricultural experts warn, however, it is too early to make accurate predictions.

Reduced during the first years of collectivization to less than half of their former size, the Soviet herds are now increasing. Following the collective farm congress here last winter, the number of heads of livestock which collective farmers might own privately was substantially increased. The new regulations in this respect already are giving results.

RKO To Produce 48 Feature Films

Plans For 1935-36 Season Are Made Known At Company's Convention In Chicago

RKO Radio Pictures will produce 48 feature-length films for release during the 1935-36 season, it was announced on June 18 at the company's annual sales convention now in session at the Drake Hotel in Chicago. Besides these films, the RKO Distributing Corporation will release 211 short subjects, including thirty-six two-reel comedies, twelve episodes of "The March of Time," fifty-two one-reel films to be made by the Van Buren Corporation, 104 issues of Pathe Topics, according to the New York Times.

There will be three pictures starring Katharine Hepburn; one with Lily Pons, the Metropolitan Opera singer; three musicals co-starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, two Wheeler and Woolsey comedies, two with Ann Harding and one each with Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer. Pioneer Pictures, producers of the current "Becky Sharp," will contribute two films which will be made in the new three-component Technicolor process. John Ford, the director who made "The Informer" last season, will be represented on the new schedule with another Irish drama, Sean O'Casey's "The Plough and the Stars."

Miss Hepburn will appear in screen versions of "Mary of Scotland," the Theater Guild play which starred Helen Hayes; "Sylvia Scarlet," an adaptation of the novel by Compton Mackenzie, and Sir James M. Barrie's "Quality Street." The team of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers will continue as a team in "Top Hat," which has been completed and will be released early next Fall; "Follow the Fleet," and a third as yet unnamed. Miss Rogers also will be starred in "In Person," a story by Samuel Hopkins Adams. Lily Pons will make her film debut in "Love Song," which will be directed by John Cromwell and produced by Pandro S. Berman.

One of the more ambitious productions for the new season, which begins in August, will be "The Return of Peter Grimm," an adaptation of the stage success by the late David Belasco, starring Lionel Barrymore. There also will be a biographical film, "Mr. Grant," which will depict the highlights in the life of General Grant. Barbara Stanwyck will be seen in "Shooting Star," and William Powell in "Two o'clock Courage," based on the novel by Gelett Burgess.

The program calls for two Western dramas with Richard Dix; two "gay films" with Gene Raymond, and two pictures with James Gleason. In addition to the Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers vehicles there will be two more musical films, one of which is to be called "To Beat the Band."

The films will be distributed over a period of a year, four being released each month.

Perfect Weather Need For Trip Into Stratosphere

Good Conditions In Area Larger Than Whole Of France Required For Success

A piece of perfect weather larger than the whole of France, sailing down out of the northwest onto America's prairies, is what the National Geographic Army Air Corps stratosphere flyers will hope for when they scan their weather maps when they are ready to make their flight.

"Good" weather is fairly plentiful, but the crew of the big balloon Explorer II must have practically perfect weather over an area of approximately 250,000 square miles to insure success and safety for their trip.

Need High Pressure Area

The type of weather they need is comparatively rare—and it can't be made to order.

Before the flyers can start aloft they must have what weather-men call a high pressure area, or "high" extending several hundred miles over half a dozen states surrounding the take- off point in the Black Hills of South Dakota.

This will bring them the conditions they need—a perfectly clear sky, no clouds, rains or storms, and surface winds that are no more than mild breezes at best.

Such a type of weather must prevail over a vast area because the balloon may drift several hundred miles in any of several directions during the 12 hours or more that it is aloft.

Clouds along its path would interfere with plans to photograph the earth and horizon, and would hinder navigation of the balloon by cooling the gas, thus decreasing its lifting power. If the balloon passed through clouds in landing it might lose heat rapidly and fall so fast that avoiding a crash would be difficult. Electrical storms must be avoided because of the violent winds associated with them, and high winds near the ground would add to the difficulty of both launching and landing the balloon.

Moves Clockwise

In a high pressure area such as the balloonists need, the air near the surface of the earth moves around the center in the same direction as the hands of a clock, causing winds that blow spirally outward from the center. The winds are almost always light, however, and often a calm prevails.

The flow of the air is downward rather than upward, so that moisture is not carried to the cooler upper air and condensed. As a result there usually are no clouds formed in a "high", hence there is no rain.

A high pressure area is known as such because a greater than normal weight of air is accumulated within it exerting greater pressure at the surface of the earth.

A "high" is the opposite of a "low," or low pressure area, in which there is less than the normal weight of air aloft. In a "low" the winds blow spirally inward, and in a counter-clockwise direction. The air currents rise, carrying moisture upward, with the result that clouds are formed and rain falls.

"Lows" and "highs" chase each other constantly from west to east across the United States. They move slowly, continually changng in shape and size.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Girl Who Died 801 Times

Louise Lateau was born in Bois d'Haine, Belgium on January 29, 1850. On the first Friday of the year 1868, she began to show the symptoms of the stigmata, bleeding profusely through imaginary wounds in the hands, feet and side. On Friday, April 24, 1868, at the stroke of 12, she expired in the traditional manner of the Saviour on the Cross, and continued to die every Friday until her death on August 25, 1883. Thus she died 801 times. She would only be recalled to life by the call of ecclesiastical authority, the so-called "Rappel." March 30, 1871, was the last day on which she took any food. From then on, she abstained completely from eating or sleeping, until her death more than 12 years later. Yet she remained in good health, and was able to work in house and garden.

A scientific commission appointed by the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Brussels found her a case of genuine stigmatic neuropathy, exhibiting all the phenomena of the Passion of Christ.

I have based my story on the account of Dr. Lefebvre, Professor of Medicine at the University of Louvain, and Member of the Royal Academy of Medicine, a high scientific authority, who vouches for genuineness of the symptoms.

Trillion Atoms Make an Inch, Physicist Says

Millions Of Nuclei On Each Fly Speck, Dr. Begthe Tells American Society

More than 100 leading physicians delved into infinitessimal atomic structures at the 199th national meeting of the American Physical Society and then talked of splitting those unperceivable strutures apart. All the papers read at the two-day convention at Minneapolis, Minn., concerned disintegration of the atomic nucleus.

Professor Hans Begthe, of Cornell University, mentioned fractional measurements so close to zero that the denominators would have done credit to an astronomer. For instance, he disclosed that the nucleus of an atom is one-trillionth of an inch in diameter.

This measurement, Professor Begthe said, is the result of more precise measuring methods necessitated by physicists' yearning to disintegrate the nuclei, of which there are several million to fly speck. Professor Begthe discussed "Nuclear Structure and Stability."

Dr. C. C. Luritsen, of the California Institute of Technology, whose subject was "Gamma Ray and Electrons From the Transmutation of Some Light Element," said physicists had learned a great deal about nuclei during research of the last year.

It still is not practical, however, to change lead into gold by bombarding the lead nuclei with high voltage electrical discharges and jarring loose some of the electrons, he indicated. Science can produce only about five cents worth of one substance for each $1,000 expended on transmutation of another, Dr. Lauritsen said.

Dr. L. R. Hosstad, of the Carnegie Institution, at Washington, discussed "Current Nuclear Physics Problems in the Region Below 1,000 Kilobolts." Dr. Gregory Breit, of the University of Wisconsin, spoke on "Race of Nuclear Reaction Due to Bombardment With Charged Particles."

Other subjects included the "Effect of Chlorin Ions on X-Ray Diffraction in Aqueous Solution" and "A Study of the First Park Spectrum of Casium as Excited by Electron Impact."

The convention adjourned early to permit delegates time for a picnic at scenic Lake Minnetonka, outside Minneapolis.

U.S. Wants To Settle Debts With USSR

Rengo

WASHINGTON, July 15—The conclusion of a trade agreement with Soviet Russia will not stop America's efforts to achieve a favorable settlement of $700,000,000 old debts of Russia to the United States, Undersecretary of State, William Phillips stated to the press here today.

He added that the question remained where it was last February when the negotiations met with an impasse. Officials said that they knew of no immediate plans to resume debt discussions.

AMBASSADOR SAILS

The American Ambassador and Mrs. Grew are to sail at 8 p.m. today from Yokohama on the President Hoover for America. Among the recent farewell parties in honor of the Ambassador was that given by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Koki Hirota, at his official residence Tuesday. In addition to Mr. Grew, the guests were Mrs. Cecil Lyon, the American Counsellor and Mrs. Edwin L. Neville, Count Kabayama, Baron and Baroness Dan, Prince and Princess Fumimaro Konoye, Marquis and Marchioness Y. Tokugawa, Baron and Baroness Kumao Harada, Ambassador and Mrs. Shigeru Yoshida, Mr. Saburo Kurusu, chief of the bureau of Commercial Affairs, and Mrs. Kurusu, Mr. Kennosuke Horiuchi, chief of the American bureau, and Mrs. Horiuchi, Mr. Kishi, secretary to the Foreign Minister, and Mrs. Kishi.

In Washington, the Ambassador and Mrs. Grew will visit their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Pierrepont Moffat who will leave in August for Sydney, Australia, where Mr. Moffat has been appointed Consul-General.

Returning to Japan by way of Europe, according to present plans, the Ambassador and Mrs. Grew will visit another son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Robert English who are in Budapest where Mr. English is with the American Embassy. Ambassador and Mrs. Grew expect to return to Japan in Demeber.

COLLEGE ENTERTAINMENT

The Oriental Culture Summer College of Tokyo will give an entertainment from 10 a.m. Saturday at the Sankaido building, Tameike Akasaka. Invitations have been extended by Mr. Kaju Nakamura, president of the college. The program includes Japanese music, dancing, flower arrangements, and refreshments. The program in detail is as follows:

Sekigwa, demonstration of Japanese art—By Mr. Kokwan Kojo (from 10 a.m.)

Flower arrangement—By Mrs. Josui Oshikawa and her assistants; explanation by Mrs. Hazel Gorham.

Musical program, directed by Prof. Hisao Tanabe (from 1 p.m.)

Koto and Shakuhachi duet "Hachidan no Shirabe" (composed by Yatsuhashi Kengyo about 1600 A.D.): Koto—Mr. Genchi Hisamoto; Shakuhachi—Mr. Yuzan Katayama.

Japanese Song with Samisen: Nagauta "Ayame-Yukata"—By the students of Japanese Music Academy.

Tenor Solo with Koto and Shakuhachi accompaniments: Solo and Koto—Mr. Genchi Hisamoto; Shakuhachi—Mr. Yuzan Katayama. "Natsun no Hatsuhana," Flawers in Early Summer (composed by Mr. Genchi Hisamoto).

Japanese Ballet with Samisen accompaniment: "Tsurukame," Crane and Tortoise. (This is the dance wishing for longevity of the Emperor).

Koto Solo: "Etude, No. 5" (composed by Genchi Hisamoto) By Mr. Genchi Hosamoto.

LEGATION HOURS

The Siamese Legation will be opened from 9 a.m., to 1 p.m. each day during the summer season from now to September 10.

ENTERTAINED AT DINNER

Count Muneyori Terashima, who recently returned from the United States where he was graduated from Princeton University, was the guest of honor at a dinner given Thursday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Iwajiro Yasuda. Guests were Dr. and Mrs. Tango, Mr. and Mrs. Shuzaburo Yasuda, Miss Shinako Terashima, Miss Kiyoko Kume, and Mr. I. Hatai. The dinner was held at a Japanese restaurant.

SAILED TODAY

Mr. James Langley, first secretary at the Canadian Legation, sailed this afternoon on the Empress of Japan for Canada. Mr. B. G. Ryan, general agent of the passenger department of the Canadian Pacific offices in Yokohama and Tokyo, and Mrs. Ryan also sailed on the same boat for a four months vacation in the United States and Canada.

OLD-TIMERS MEETING

The second annual "old-timers" meeting of the older missionaries will be held in Karuizawa on August 6. Those who came to Japan during or before 1902 are invited to attend. The meeting will be held between 4 and 6 p.m. at No. 895.

MR. PARSONS LEAVES

Mr. J. Graham Parsons of the American Embassy sails this evening on the President Hoover for America. He was the guest at a cocktail party given by Mr. and Mrs. J. Hilbrock Chapman Thursday afternoon.

LEAVING FOR ENGLAND

Departing on the Empress of Japan this afternoon were the Rev. E. G. Bucknill, retired chaplain of Christ Church, Yokohama, and Mrs. Bucknill. They are en route to England.

CALLS ON PREMIER

Mr. Kenzo Nakagawa, Governor General of Taiwan paid an official call on Premier Admiral Keisuke Okada at the latter's official residence at 10 a.m. Thursday.

Reports were made to the Premier on the extent of the damage and casualties in the earthquake disaster in central Taiwan.

Mr. Nakagawa is also reported to have exchanged views with the Premier regarding relief measures for the victims of the disaster.

NAVAL GRADUATION

A joint graduation ceremony of the students in six naval schools, the Naval Gunnery School, the Torpedo School, the Engineering School, the Navigation School, the Communications School and the Yokosuka Naval Air Corps, was held in Yokosuka at 10 a.m. Thursday in the presence of Fleet-Admiral H. I. H. Prince Hiroyasu Fushimi, Chief of the Naval General Staff.

Also present at the function were Navy Minister Mineo Osumi, Admiral Nobumasa Suetsugu, Commandant of the Yokosuka Naval Station and Navy members of the Supreme War Council.

First-Lieutenant Sadatomo Okada, the son of the Premier Admiral Keisuke Okada, was graduated from the Torpedo School with honors.

SAILING TODAY

Among those leaving for Canada on the Empress of Japan this afternoon are Mr. and Mrs. Morinosuke Kawasaki, who are doing a combined business and pleasure trip to Canada, America, and Europe.

LANGUAGE STUDY

Mr. Yahei Matsumiya, Dean of the Language Department of the School of Japanese Language and Culture, and two other trained teachers are now in Karuizawa giving the lessons n Japanese Language.

Instructions are given everyday between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Work will be credited toward regular work of the School of Japanese Language and Culture.

Dean Matsumiya will also give three special courses for Advanced Students, Prayer Language, Grammar of Spoken Japanese and Some Remarks on Advanced Conversation. These courses will be given every morning from 9 to 12 beginning on August 5 and ending on August 16.

Any inquiry or application should be made to Mr. Matsumiya at his house, No. 545 Karuizawa.

AT RESORT LODGE

Arrivals at the New Grand Lodge Karuizawa Wednesday were Mr. K. Yasui of Tokyo, Mr. S. Kobayagawa of Kyoto, Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Dell'oro of Yokohama, Mrs. A. Rogers of Shanghai, Mrs. T. Schneider of Yokohama, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Clark of Tokyo, Mr. M. Krupka of Tokyo, Mr. Hiroyasu of Tokyo, Mrs. A. sen of Tokyo, Mr. K. Doi of Yokosadoc of Shanghai, Mrs. A. H. Hanhama.

CHRIST CHURCH YOKOHAMA

Services at Christ Church, Yokohama, on Sunday are:

Work Is Started On New Subway In Buenos Aires

City's Fastest Line, To Cost $21,450,000, Will Serve Suburbs In Comfort

A "kilometer-a-minute" underground railway, to be the longest and fastest in Buenos Aires, is being constructed by the company which last year completed what probably is the most luxurious line in th world, its stations, with mural paintings of Spanish life, attractive mosaic walls and indirect lighting, having become show places of this city.

The new subway, to cost approximately 65,000,000 paper pesos (about $21,450,000), will be eleven and a half kilometers long. It will connect the business district in the vicinity of the Plaza Mayo with the outlying fashionable residential areas of Belgrano, Palermo and Saavedra, where many Americans, English and Germans reside, according to the Buenos Aires correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune.

Speed will be stressed, according to Compania Hispana Argentina de Obras Publicans Finanzas, the firm which is building and which will operate the line.

Trains spaced at two-minute intervals will make the run from Plaza Balcarce to the downtown terminus in twenty minutes, an average of thirty-five kilometers an hour, including stops at the nineteen stations. To maintain this average the trains must travel at a kilometer a minute.

Automatic electric safety devices will control the trains to prevent collisions. Each train will seat 250 persons, with standing room for rush hours.

Excavation work recently was begun. The first section of the line, from its downtown terminal to Pueyrredon, or about one fourth of the entire line, is expected to be opened by the end of 1936.

The subway will give Buenos Aires a total of thirty-two kilometers of subterranean railways, probably the largest system of any city its size in the world. It will compare favorably, proportionately to its population, with the systems of New York, London, Paris and Berlin.

There has been no major disaster or collision in the subways here. Consequently the public is turning more and more to them, attracted by their cleanliness, speed and safety. During rush hours the stations resemble those of New York or London with their crowds.

Japanese Colonization Plan Arouses Interest

ability to live on the grain it sells. Alongside the luxurious Japanese farmers will be the Shantung coolies getting out soya beans and kaoliang at a much cheaper cost. If both groups haul their product to the nearest export station the usual bargaining may drive the Japanese yield below the cost of production. In other words the Japanese, if offered equality in competition, might be forced out. But it must be remembered that the Japanese are skilfull organizers. As it has been explained to me the newcomers from Japan will go into a different kind of farming, of a mixed variety, with more attention to pigs and stock and a general arrangement plan looking to community selfsufficiency. Their aim will be to raise the level of the farmer's life in Manchuria.

Standard of Life Raised

This point is novel in the extreme, especially as one of the objections raised to immigration by America, the British dominions and other places was that new settlers tended to lower the standard of life. That was one of the complaints about Asiatic settlement in America, although it could not apply to Japanese who were justly famous for quickly adopting the life-standard of the western peoples with whom they lived, a concession generously announced by the British Columbia authorities. From this point alone Manchuria should welcome the island farmers, for with them will come better roads, improved marketing, higher grades of grain and stock farming, more comfortable living conditions, all slowly acquired, but nevertheless inevitable.

As for Japan's right to an outlet for its million increase a year, that is established by every social student and statesman. Even critics of Japan concede the justice and the logical trend to the continental mainland. They have cause to remember, too, how Japan was forced into its present policy. After the failure of the Gentleman's Agreement, that measure designed by America and Japan to check Nipponese migration to the United tates, and after it was made evident in other places, especially Australia, how little desired were Japanese citizens, Japan in 1926 announced she no longer would send emigrants to countries which did not welcome them.

New Budget Scientific

The Finance Ministry's announcement accompanying the general accounts budget for the second fiscal year somewhat ramblingly explains away the necessity to borrow for balancing purposes. The budget actually is one for the second half of 1935, for in 1936 the budget period will conform to the calendar twelve-month, a technical arrangement very sensibly designed to make the government's business statement conform to the budget periods of commercial houses. Government borrowings are stated to be Yuan 59,-200,000. Reduced to practical terms the money is required to meet investments on capital account. For the ordinary departmental needs State revenues are ample, with substanial margin. But the country, in carrying out its big development program, needs large amounts for investment purposes, such as further construction of the capital city, the initiation of the oil monopoly, instalment payment on the North Manchuria railway purchase and similar purposes.

The borrowings are considered justified by expanding trade; presumably succeeding budgets will contain measures to provide money for the amortization payment of these new loans. It is all scientifically worked out in harmony with the good business methods of Japanese finance as applied to the Hsinking Finance Ministry by Japanese experts drawn from departments in Japan.

In further explanation it is shown that the general accounts expenditures were balanced with expected revenues. Strict economy and retrenchment are the main purposes of the Manchoukuo government, but the technicians in charge are not letting ideas of economy interfere with their principal plan of expansion.

London Phone Girl Wins P.O. Voice Contest

Poet Laureate And Dame Sybil Thorndike Among Judges; 15,000 Compete

Miss E. W. Cain, of the Victoria Exchange, London, was declared the winner of the Golden Voice competition run by the Post Office recently to discover the most suitable voice for informing telephone subscribers of the time by means of "talking clocks."

Nine girl operators selected from over 15,000 in exchanges throughout the country met in the King George V. Hall of the Central Telegraph Office for the last stage of a contest which has made telephonists "voice conscious" and has aroused great interest and local rivalry, according to The Times, London. Four of the nine were from London exchanges and the others came from Guildford, South Shields, Birmingham, Exeter, and Blackpool.

A panel of judges consisted of Mr. John Masefield (the Poet Laureate), Dame Sybil Thorndike, Lord Cliffe, Mr. S. Hibberd (chief announcer of the B.B.C.), and Mrs. E. D. Atkinson, of Burnley-in-Wharfedale, who had been chosen by ballot as the "perfect telephone subscriber." They did not see the competitors until their task was completed, but, seated together at a table, listened through shielded hand-microphones to test passages read by the operators.

The final trial was a severe one for the girls. They learned from their instructions that the judges demanded that "the voice must be beautiful in quality. It must have a fullness of tone, with nothing niggardly about it and nothing rasping in the breathing or in the note. The speech must be impersonal. It should be as detached as the voice of a bird, without trace of overemphasis or personal advertisement. It should be without any trace whatever of the theatrical." Other stipulations were that the speech must be clear and free from accent, urban or provincial.

Passage From Milton

The candidates balloted for the order in which they were to go to the microphone, and then in turn they repeated the test passages put before them. First, they were required to read some 30 lines of a passage from Milton's "L'Allegro," beginning:—

Mirth, admit me of thy crew.
To live with her, and live with thee,
In unreproved pleasures free;
And singing startle the dull night.
From his watch-tower in the skies; . . .

This was followed by a short extract from R. L. Stevenson's "Treasure Island" and a strictly practical test made up of such sentences as "At the third stroke it will be one twenty four and fifty seconds."

At the end of the trial the competitors met the judges and Mr. Masefield announced the result. Miss Cain, who was placed first, has been a telephone operator for five years, and has worked in the Croydon and Victoria Exchanges. Her home is in Mitcham Road, West Croydon. After being congratulated she admitted that 26 was a good guess concerning her age, and said that she had taken part in amateur theatricals and studied elocution. Mr. Masefield made the comment that she had a golden voice. "It is beautiful," he said. Second place in the competition was taken in Miss I. H. Dunn, of the Trunk Exchange, London.

Major G. C. Tryon, the Postmaster-General, presented a prize of 10 guineas to Miss Cain and one of five guineas to Miss Dunn.

Miss Liberty Greeted In U.S. Fifty Years Ago

The Statue of Liberty, growing greener and more mellow each year through nearly half a century of wind and salt spray whipping around Bedloes Island, celebrated an anniversary quietly on June 19. Fifty years ago a French warship steamed into the harbor bringing the great Bartholdi statue, a gift from France on the centenary of American independence.

A monumental work that took the sculptor, Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, ten years to complete, the Statue of Liberty became a symbol of American freedom, and because of its setting, where mighty and small ships of all nations pass in perpetual review, is one of the most widely-known memorials in the world, says the New York Times.

It was officially dedicated on Oct. 28, 1886, by President Cleveland, and the official fifth anniversary will be held on that date next year.

Huge Peace Vote Revealed By Cecil

11,627,765 Britons Ballotted Overwhelmingly For League And For Arms Cuts

Forty per cent of the entire British electorate has participated in the great peace ballot that began about six months ago and ended on June 27 at a mass meeting in Albert Hall, London.

The total of votes cast by men and women, as announced by Viscount Cecil of Chelwood, was 11,-627,765.

The list of questions and the votes, according to the New York Times, were:

Should Britain remain a member of the League? Yes, 11,090,387; no, 355,883; doubtful, 10,470; abstentions, 102,425.

Are you in favor of an all-round reduction of armaments by international agreement? Yes, 10,470,-489; no, 862,775; doubtful, 12,062; abstentions, 213,839.

Are you in favor of an all-round abolition of national military and naval aircraft by international agreement? Yes, 9,533,558; no 1,689,786; doubtful, 16,976; abstentions, 318,845.

Should the manufacture and sale of armaments for private profit be prohibited? Yes, 10,417,329; no, 775,415; doubtful, 15,076; abstentions, 351,345.

If one nation attacks another should other nations compel it to desist by (a) economic non-military measures? Yes, 10,027,-608; no, 635,074; doubtful, 27,255; abstentions, 855,107. (b) By military measures if necessary? Yes, 6,784,368; no, 2,351,981; doubtful, 40,893; abstentions, 2,344,441.

The total vote comes within 300,-000 of the record vote cast for the coalition government in the emergency election in 1931. With the exception of that election the peace ballot exceeds any vote ever cast by any political party in Great Britain. The largest party vote on record was 8,656,473, cast for the Conservatives in 1929.

Ballot Assailed by Simon

This was a peace ballot proposed by Lord Cecil in behalf of the League of Nations Union last November. Sir John Simon, then Foreign Minister, denounced it in the House of Commons and said it was mischievous to ask the opinion of "uninformed persons" on such intricate matters as peace and war.

"This ballot is not an end in itself," Lord Cecil said after announcing the figures. "It must be made the starting point for further exertion. This vote is a solemn declaration by a free, educated people of their will on vital issues which they feel with passionate intensity.

"It is for those who represent them in Parliament and the Cabinet to carry those wishes into effect. I hope that the Ministers of the Government and the members and candidates for Parliament will not be allowed to forget that a general election is near at hand."

VISIT IN JAPAN AIDS PRIZE WINNER

A trip through Japan last summer aided Beatrice Ann Frear of Evanston, Ill., win the first prize in the national competitive examinations of the League of Nations it was revealed in New York recently according to word which reached Tokyo this morning.

Her understanding of international problems was so marked that she easily won first place in the contest in which 10,000 students from 1,658 high schools vied.

As a result of winning the prize, she gets a free trip to England, France, Germany, Italy, Holland, Austria, and Switzerland this summer. She told reporters, in an interview following the announcement of her prize, that she wou'd concentrate this summer on being a little more frivolous because she did not want to be taken for a "high brow."

She was never a child prodigy, she demonstrated, though she has been an honor student, averaging about 91, with a special bent for history and English.

Discussing international affairs, Miss Frear answered a question about Manchuria as follows:

"That's a pretty involved situation but I spent four months in the Orient last year and from what I observed, I feel that the Japanese had a great deal of provocation for their military activities there."

To Spend 50 Millions On Youth In America

needs of that portion of unemployed youth most seriously affected at the present time.

"It is my sincere hope that all public and private agencies, groups and organizations, as well as educators, recreational leaders, employers and labor leaders, will cooperate whole-heartedly with the national and State youth administrations in the furtherance of this national youth program.

"The yield on this investment should be high."

Training for Federal Service

Included in the "job" program is a plan of training selected youths for government service, foreshadowing a permanent civil service organization like that of England, and the President stresses that particular efforts must be made to find jobs for college graduates of 1935.

Boys and girls unable to attend high school for want of money for carfare, lunches and incidentals will, if over 16 years of age, receive an average of $6 a month to permit them to continue their secondary education.

An average of $15 a month will be given to unemployed high-school graduates under 25 to assist them in obtaining college education. No subsidies will be granted institutions under this plan, and students will be expected to pay part of the costs themselves, as in the past.

The present rule that those receiving work-relief aid in colleges shall not exceed 12 per cent of any institution's enrolment was held likely to be changed to permit more work-relief students to attend.

Aid for taking graduate courses, to be given to a selected group of those who are unable to find private employment on leaving college, will not be put on any fixed basis.

$15 a Month for Work Relief

It is provided that only "unemployed youths in families that are certified for relief" shall receive outright work relief jobs, and an average wage of $15 a month will be paid to the young laborers. It is assumed that the heads of their families will hold better paid work relief jobs

In this connection the announcement of the objectives of the plan said:

"Particular stress should be laid upon the building and the use of recreational and community centres which, depending upon local conditions and the energy, ability and enthusiasm of local youth groups, can be anything from an old-fashioned 'swimming hole' to a complete centre including all types of athletic facilities, community houses, library, class rooms, &c.

"In most communities these community centers can be made self-liquidating. Substantially all of the direct labor in the creation of these centers shall be performed by youths themselves, working as apprentices under the direction of skilled mechanics."

It is further provided that "a national census of all youths in the United States between the ages of 16 and 25 is to be undertaken, using competent youths within that age group to carry on the work."

During the afternoon Mr. Roosevelt conferred briefly with leaders of the Youth Administration and went over details of the plan. The leaders promised that the program will be under way within ten days.

Among those present were Mr. Hopkins, Secretary Morgenthau, Miss Roche and Mr. Williams.

"It is certain that we will be well under way in ten days and, I hope, in full swing by mid-July," Mr. Williams remarked.

Director for Each State

A small central organization to be manned by men and women drawn from other governmental organizations would be set up separately from the FERA and the Works Progress Administration, he added, with an Assistant Youth Administration Director selected for each State.

It was noted here that two of the aims of the President's youth program are similar to phases of Senator Long's "share-the-wealth" plan. Training for industrial, technical and professional jobs and provisions for continued attendance at high schools and colleges are urged by Mr. Long.

Enrolment of 30,189 recruits for the enlarged Civilian Conservation Corps during the first week of enlistment was announced today by Robert Fechner, CCC Director, as another program designed to aid the young gathered headway again.

By the week of July 4 there will be 400,000 workers in the organization receiving $30 a month, Mr. Fechner estimated. The limit of 600,000 youth would probably be reached by August, officials said.

Italy Forsakes Indifference To Ethiopia 'War'

Mussolini's Campaign For Home Support Gains After Propaganda Barrage

A passage in a book recently compiled by Premier Benito Mussolini might help to clarify the minds of those in democratic countries who have believed the Italian adventure in Ethiopia would not go far because it hasn't enthusiastic support at home, and because imperialism is not considered a very nice word these days.

The book scarcely could be called another "Mein Kampf" except in a minor way, for it consists mostly of reprint speeches and a tabulation of Fascist institutions and laws, but there are two chapters from the pen of Il Duce, says the Rome correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune.

One called "Political and Social Doctrine" has this passage: "Fascism sees in the imperialistic spirit—the manifestation of their vitality. In the opposite tendency, which would limit interests to the home country, it sees the symptoms of decadence. Peoples who rise or re-arise are imperialistic; renunciation is a characteristic of dying peoples.

"The Fascist doctrine is that best suited to the tendencies and feelings of a people, which, like the Italian, after lying fallow during centuries of foreign servitude, is now reasserting itself in the world. But imperialism implies discipline, the coordination of efforts, a deep sense of duty and a spirit of self-sacrifice. This explains many aspects of the regime's practical activities and the direction taken by many forces of the state, and also the severity which has to be exercised toward those who would oppose this spontaneous and inevitable movement of twentieth-century Italy by agitating the outgrown ideologies of the nineteenth century—ideologies rejected wherever great experiments in political and social transformations are being dared."

This passage expresses the two Fascist ideas of the first rank which are directly applicable to the Ethiopian affair. The first concerns imperialistic ambitions frankly avowed, and the second the relation of public opinion to state policy.

Mussolini has always preached imperialism, said that war was inevitable, and has spoken of imperialistic war as one of the highest duties of the state. In the volume quoted above he called imperial rule "the highest manifestation of human power," and supplements it with a quotation from an early speech, in which he said: "I believe if people wish to live they should develop the will to power."

Yet the first time he starts to put this belief into practice much of the world acts surprised. When in Sardegna a few days ago Il Duce spoke derisively of the "puppet of world opinion," he probably felt like adding that it was a puppet without eyes and ears. To the Fascists it looks as if post-war peoples of other lands have passed too much time absorbing the idea of imperialism as "a great illusion", punctured by war and not enough listening to Il Duce. Imperialism is a necessity to Facism. And as a necessity of state it is surprising to Fascists that others think any sort of popular mandate for it should be needed.

A widespread enthusiasm for the Ethiopian adventure never was claimed nor attempted until it was well under way. At first great sections of the public appeared either indifferent or mildly skeptical. Some were openly opposed—what Mussolini termed "agitating outworn, outgrown ideologies." They have his word for the severity they may expect. But those practical activities of the regime which he said were explained by imperialistic needs have not been confined to repression.

The dispute with Ethiopia has given an excellent opportunity to put into practice the theory that under Fascism the state guides and the public follows. There is a certain wry amusement in finding the members of the British Parliament attaching importance to the fact that Mussolini is acting without consulting the people. The languages of democracies and dictatorships seem to be becoming mutually incomprehensible. About the nearest democratic idea Mussolini ever expressed was to say that Fascism "should go toward the people." That is the opposite of receiving authority from the people.

Says Fascism "Ends" in Masses

In his new book he describes the process, saying that Fascism—including its imperialistic principles—is "an idea expressing itself in a people as the conscience and will of the few, if not indeed of one; and ending in the expression of itself in the will of the masses."

Ending not beginning. Precisely that course has been followed regarding public opinion and Ethiopia. For years Fascism has taught that the supreme right of people was discipline to the will of the state. For equally long it has been training Italians to think imperialistically. Schools, literature, the press, even the scenery, teem with the ideas of empire. Millions have been spent resurrecting the archeological remains of the Caesars, scarcely done altogether in the interest of the pure science of town planning.

For two years Mussolini's constant theme when addressing crowds has been to warn that hard times are ahead and that sacrifices must be made in the interests of "destiny." All young men of military age now have had Fascist educations, and no existing educational system is so thoroughly designed to prepare a generation for imperialistic warfare. For months the press and radio have followed a rhythm designed to inject step by step into the minds thus prepared the image of Ethiopia as a natural outlet.

Demands Replacing Indifference

In five months this chorus has risen from annoyance over frontier incidents and preparations for protection, to a crescendo of demands for satisfaction and animosity toward foreigners who want to interfere. How truly successful have been the efforts to "make the will of the few, if not, indeed, of one" become the will of the mass? It is difficult to estimate honestly, for unfavorable opinion here has only a rudimentary means of expression. Certainly, however, the foreigners in Rome who try to keep in touch with public opinion believe the tide is swinging from indifference to favor.

Many believe the violent propaganda against England for daring to try to halt Mussolini was the turning point. Time may be needed to answer that question. Meanwhile, it is certain the anti-British incident was another evidence that Fascism and democracy are psychologically estranged. While the government spokesmen in Rome were hoping the British government would overlook "politics," the English were complaining because the Fascists did not seem to realize that that was exactly what the government would not be able to do if the attacks made much impression on the British public.

2,000 Sq. Mile 'Blind Spot' In Yukon Erased

Plane Plays Big Part In Survey Of National Geographic Society Expedition

A two-thousand square mile blind spot, in southwestern Yukon Territory, a region of lofty mountain ranges and deep glacier-filled valleys and gorges, has been erased from the map of North America, according to Bradford Washburn, leader of the National Geographic Society's Yukon Expedition, who returned to Washington to make his report to Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, President of the Society, after four months in the field.

Mr. Washburn and his small but well-euipped expedition left Seattle in February, set up their first base camp 150 miles west of Carcross and then began the long trek overland that resulted in the discovery of unknown mountain ranges, the exploration for the first time of the whole course of the Alsek River, and the photographing from an airplane of 10,000 square miles of a region whose ruggedness amazed Mr. Washburn who had climbed some of the most forbidding peaks of North America and Europe.

Plane Facilitates Exploration

The explorer was high in his praise of the airplane in connection with the expedition. Much time was saved by flying supplies for advanced camps from the expedition base. In one instance the plane flew in nine minutes to a camp that it took the explorer 16 days to reach by dog team. Photographs taken from the plane on reconnaissance flights were used to lay out the ground route and saved many days of difficult travel.

While the expedition returned to the coast without disaster, Mr. Washburn reported that blinding blizzards, terrific gales, and frigid weather frequently slowed up its progress. To move afoot was often hazardous, to fly was impossible. During the early days of the expedition while flying at more than 18,000 feet, the mercury hovered around 15 degrees below zero Fahrenheit. Below the plane, tumbled masses of snow-capped mountains and uninhabited ice-filled valleys would have meant death in case of forced landing. To make its surveys, the expedition was forced to camp on ice for more than 80 days, longer than any other North American expedition has endured the hardships of such a camping ground. In May, for 57 hours, Mr. Washburn said he and his companions survived one blizzard that piled snow deeper than 60 inches, almost burying their camp.

Set Up Highest Station

The crossing afoot for the first time of the St. Elias Range near the border of Alaska and the Yukon, was one of the expedition's outstanding feats that tested the stamina of the men. Several immense new mountain peaks were discovered while en route over this range and their positions located with surveying instruments. At one time, Mr. Washburn said, the expedition carried cameras and surveying instruments to a height of more than 12,000 feet on Mt. Hubbard and set up the highest survey station ever occupied in Canada or Alaska.

Two of the newly discovered peaks were named for King George and Queen Mary in honor of their silver jubilee year. When King George was apprised of the naming of the peaks, Sir John Simon, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, sent the following telegram:

King's Message

"The King commands me to express to you the sincere appreciation of the compliment which the National Geographic Society Yukon Expedition has paid to His Majesty and to the Queen in naming the newly discovered peaks after their majesties in commemoration of his Silver Jubilee. The King congratulates the expedition on their important achievement in effecting the first crossing of the St. Elias Range from Yukon to Alaska."

A huge glacier, 40 miles long, one of the largest in North America, was named after expresident Abbot Lawrence Lowell of Harvard University, because of his interest in the exploration of the region.

Mr. Washburn's photographs resemble those of the Antarctic taken by the Byrd expedition, except that the Yukon mountains are higher and more massive.

Members of the expedition in addition to Washburn were: Robert H. Bates, Philadelphia, Pa.; Hartness Beardsley, Springfield, Vt.; Adams Carter, West Newton, Mas.; Ome Daiber, Seattle, Wash.; Andrew M. Taylor, Ottawa, Canada. Robert Randall of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, was the pilot of the expedition's ski-equipped airplane.

Social and Personal Notes

ALUMNI CELEBRATION

The annual business meeting and dinner of the University of Washington Alumni, was held at the Rainbow Grill on Monday evening. Dr. E. Uyehara, the president of the society, acted as chairman, and Dr. Jesse F. Steiner, head of the Department of Sociology of the university was the guest of honor.

Dr. Steiner spoke on recent changes in the administration of the university and on the new president. He then dealt with social and economic conditions in America, the unemployment situation and the efforts being made toward recovery. He has come to spend his summer holidays in Japan and to investigate how sociology is taught in the universities. He has also come to meet professors specializing in sociology, and to see the social changes that are taking place here.

Mr. Masatomi of the Tokyo Nichi Nichi and Mr. Uchikata responded to Mr. Steiner by pointing out the trend of social affairs in Japan. Mr. Kuniyama, director of the Shibaura Seihakusho, also spoke.

Previous to the dinner the officers who have served during the past year were reelected as follows:

President, Dr. E. Uyehara; Vice Presidents, Mr. U. Kuniyasu, Mr. J. Kudo, Mr. H. Fukagawa and Mr. J. Masaku, Treasures; Mr. T. Akiyama, Mr. H. Arai, and Mr. Y. Hayashitani, Recording Secretaries; Mr. K. Hoike, Mr. A. Shinoda; Corresponding Secretaries, Mr. H. Yonemoto, Mr. M. Saito. The executive committee is composed of Mr. S. Otake, Mr. E. Masatomo, Mr. S. Yonemoto, Mr. S. Horiuchi, and Mr. Y. Nishimoto.

Those present on the occasion were: Dr. E. Uyehara, Dr. Jesse F. Steiner, Mr. H. Arai, Mr. T. Asakura, Mr. C. W. Gabrielson, Mr. T. Hasiba, Mr. Y. Hayashidani, Mr. H. Hirata, Miss Hana Ishigami, Mr. Y. Kimura, Mr. M. Kobe, Mr. Y. Koitabashi, Mr. U. Kuniyasu, Mr. M. Maeda, Mr. J. Masako, Mr. E. Masatomi, Mr. T. Miyazaki, Mr. Mino, Mr. E. Cartel Idea To End Depression Offered At Paris

Would Effect Adjustment Of Supply And Demand, Is Claim Made

Cartels—industrial ententes designed to regulate internationally production and distribution of goods—emerged from the third day of the International Chamber of Commerce Congress on June 26 as a possible key to the principal problem of the depression, the adjustment of supply and demand, says the Paris correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

Political as well as economic peace is furthered by these international business accords, according to speakers at the plenary session of the Congress dealing with the organization of production and distribution. "Entente" it was pointed out, means understanding, and industrial understanding opens the way to cultural and political rapprochement.

Strictly from the business point of view, cartels, or industrial ententes, won almost unanimous indorsement in the discussions.

To Aid Trade

The following conclusions of a special report on the subject were generally approved:

"Recent developments in the economic position and study of the effects of industrial ententes have demonstrated that ententes contribute toward reestablishinp balance between the prices of raw materials and finished products and, consequently, facilitate the revival of international trade and of economic activity in general.

"At the present time, they present themselves as a practical and speedy means of reducing the barriers to the free play of trade, which have resulted from the gradual walling in of national economies. Moreover, they are likely to prevent their recurrence in the future.

"Their psychological effect has been no less fortunate. The fact that in each country a certain number of manufacturers are able to observe a greater degree of regularity in their business and a gradual improvement in results, that they are no longer in constant dread of what tomorrow may bring forth and so are able to devote themselves more freely to improving their management and working methods—all this produces a feeling of relief and well-being which, even if restricted at the outset to fairly limited circles, will gradually spread until confidence in human enterprise—the root of progress of civilization—has been restored throughout the world of industry and finance.

Affect Most People

"Ententes are necessary to the stabilizing of markets of raw materials or agricultural products, because they affect the densest layers of the population whose purchasing power it is important to restore.

"Ententes are to be recommended whenever consumption and production, or capacity of production, or a given product, are out of balance, i.e., when stocks accumulate and there is a continuous drop in prices.

"It is hardly necessary to add that the International Chamber of Commerce can only recommend the constitution of ententes with a moderate policy and which take due account of the general interest."

An eloquent plea that Governments lend their support and encouragement to these cartels was made by Clemens Lammers, an eminent German industrialist and economist who is chairman of the Chamber's standing committee for the co-ordination of production and marketing. He highly commended the attitude of the Governments concerned in the tea and rubber ententes, which he said "might well serve as a model for the co-operation of the State with private economy, a model for the co-operation of the State with private economy, as a model for the co-operation of the State with private economy, as well as an example of a sufficiently flexible cartel policy." Voluntary quota allotments under these ententes might profitably replace the compulsory import quota system now in vogue, he suggested.

Aid, Not Intervention

In the round table discussion of cartels, the prevalent opinion was that these international agreements could regulate agricultural production, restore the purchasing power of producers, and in certain cases control the extent of the areas under cultivation. Government aid in enforcing these restrictions was acknowledged as desirable, but it was generally agreed that government intervention in marketing was unnecesary and undesirable.

The policy of the International Chamber of Commerce on this point is that the public authorities should confine themselves to endorsing the decisions of producers and to preventing abuses, without attempting to control or manage the cartels. The tendency in certain countries to render these industrial agreements obligatory—a reference to the "codes" of America's New Deal and to the proposed code policy started in France by the recent Premier, Pierre Etienne Flandin,—was definitely disapproved.

Backs Roosevelt

Edward A. Filene of Boston today advocated a "New Deal" for Europe and mass distribution of goods as a deterrent to war and revolution.

In his speech he expressed the belief that the United States would be "in the throes of social revolution if it were not for President Roosevelt's New Deal program."

He termed the business situation today "most disturbing," with "Americans by the millions enrolling in movements, which, if successful, would just about destroy our business system."

He recommended the establishment of voluntary chain-store systems, to save the "little independent shopkeepers whose businesses are now dying on their hands."

Problem of Distribution

"Neither war no revolution occurs," Mr. Filene said, "where distribution is doing its job. Never do nations willingly go to war if their industries are operating at capacity and they have an adequate outlet for their products; and never do the masses rise in revolt at times when they are able to buy more and more and more.

". . . So long as there is competition and a business system, manufacturers are compelled to use the best and most economical methods so far discovered; and these, when there is an adequate market, are the methods of mass production. When there is no longer such a market, however, industries must slow down. That means widespread unemployment; and widespread unemployment means less mass-buying.

"Our problem, therefore, is to get more and more buying-power into the hands of the masses."

With reference to the Roosevelt program, the Boston merchant praised its intent as being "aimed to provide the masses with such buying power as to enable them to purchase and enjoy the products of modern industry." Then he added:

"Unfortunately, organized American business could not see in time that this increased buying was the only way by which increased selling and business recovery could be achieved, and refused to give the necessary co-operation; and now the Supreme Court has nullified most of the New Deal—not on its economic or social merits, but because, in their judgment, it was out of harmony with a Constitution adopted a century before the coming of modern industry. The situation today, therefore, is most disturbing, and Americans by the million are enrolling in movements which, if successful, would just about destroy our business system. In Europe, in many ways, the outlook is still worse, for in Europe there is the imminent double danger of revolution and war"

Royal Air Force Pageant Shows Aerial Progress

flights, singly and in groups; appear to the split second over a small green circle amid the built-up acreage that is London; perform their allotted task in three or four minutes—and disappear again to their bases. It is a fact that in order to check what is going on by the catalogue you can know the time as well by looking up into the sky as on the dial of your watch.

What time is it? Look up into the sky. Two Vickers Virginia bombers circle round from the left and begin to cross the aerodrome from the south. You look at your timetable: "Event 6. 4.13 p.m.." You look at your watch: 4.12 p.m. It is the same with every event. You wonder where the flights or squadrons that are to perform can have hidden themselves until, to the minute, they drop out of the empty zenith above the center of the aerodrome and begin their evolutions.

Only the silent presence of the ambulance and the fire-engine, with their heads turned to the arena reminds you of the possibilities of sudden tragedy. And even if any tragedy were to happen, the organization would not pause or be dislocated. And sure enough tragedy, or rather the material of it, did occur, when in the instruction demonstration the pupil's machine crashed just in front of the Press enclosure. The way in which ambulances, salvage and fire wagons rushed to the spot was another and unexpected test of organization. Fortunately the pilot walked out of the wreck uninjured.

Comic Relief

So much for a general impression. When one tries to remember the features that most held the attention one particularly remembers the low-flying attack of the Furies, in which the squadron swooped and soared and dived and came in from sevenal directions to attack the ground unit. The solemn appearance of the huge Vickers Virginia bombers—probably the slowest aircraft in the Force—which have appeared surely at every Air Display in the last ten years—might be described as the comic relief of the show.

In some minds it may have raised questions of obsolescence and inadequacy in our present situation that ought to be usefully suggestive rather than alarming. For if bombing machines came so low and made such indifferent aim with their bombs as do these antique giants, it would not be very difficult to deal with them. As it was, a few machineguns would have disposed of them.

Their targets were in the shape of haystacks, and the bombers came one after the other, low down, each loosing its twin bombs at an individual haystack. The bombs was seen to explode generally at a fair distance from the target, upon which one or other of the yellow haystacks, being presumably pulled by a cord, would slowly and obligingly lie down on its side. This was certainly the most amusing, though not exactly the most awe-inspring, event of the display.

Sheer Efficiency

For sheer air efficiency and perfection of maneuvering, I, for one, if I forget all else, would remember the exhibition of flight aerobatics by three Hawker Furies of No. 25 Squadron. Aerobatics by a single machine are marvellous and miraculous enough, as was seen in the early part of the performance; but to see three of the fatest machines in the world keeping close together in tight formation, as though they were joined by wires, zooming, soaring, doing stalled turns, rolling individually and as a formation of three, looping, diving, doing as a triple unit everything that the most daring pilot would do on a single machine with the air empty of wings—this was to realize in the highest possible degree how far man has risen in skill and daring above the natural limitations that bind him to the eath. Not even the angel of the Apocalypse conceived anything that more completely transcends the earthbound than this glorious achievement in the cloudless blue of yesterday's sky.

British High Court Admits Free State Can Leave Empire

Lord Chancellor Acknowledges Dublin's Legal Right Of Secession

The legal right of secession from the British Commonwealth is now seen to have been conceded to the Irish Free State in an important judgment delivered in London on June 6 by the highest Imperial Court of Justice, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

The legal relations between Great Britain and the Irish Free State rest on the Anglo-Irish Treaty of December, 1921, which is embodied, like the Free State's Constitution, in a Statute of the British Parliament, according to the Christian Science Monitor. A constitutional amendment passed by the Free State Parliament abolished the right of Irish nationals to appeal to the Privy Council which was provided in the Treatly and Constitution, and a test case came before the Privy Council to establish whether this amendment was in order.

The judgment given by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Sankey, on behalf of the Privy Council, not merely confirmed the amendment but affirmed the Free State's constitutional right to abrogate the whole Treaty thus dissociating itself from the Commonwealth.

Although the Free State Government was not represented by counsel during the hearings, the judgment now given is entirely in favor of the Irish Free State's point of view on this matter.

"Before the passing of the Statute of Westminster in 1930," said the Lord Chancellor, "it was not competent for the Irish Free State Paliament to pass an Act abrogating the Treaty because the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 forbade a Dominion Leislature to pass a law repugnant to an Imperial Act.

"The effect of the Statute of Westminster," he went on, "was to remove the fetter which lay upon the Irish Free State Legislature by reason of the Colonial Laws Validity Act."

Additional importance attaches to this decision because both Mr. Eamon de Valera, President of the Executive Council of the Irish Free State, as well as his opponents in the Dail, have constantly invited the British Government to say that the Irish Free State has the right to leave the Commonwealth. Now the highest British court has unanimously declared that the Free State's Legislature has the right "to abrogate" the Ango-Irish Treaty by which the Free State was given its present dominion status.

The Lord Chancellor was careful to add that he was "expressing no opinion on any contractual obligation under which, regard being had to the terms of the Treaty, the Irish Free State lies." He was merely, he said, setting forth the legal position.

Mr. de Valera has stated that the mandate he obtained at the last election did not permit him to abrogate the Treaty. But he has often said he wants to remove it, "lock, stock and barrel." The question now being asked is whether, having been given the right to leave the Commonwealth, the Free State will actually exercise it.

Ford Uses Soya Beans In Manufacturing Cars

It has been generally known for some time that Henry Ford uses the Soya bean in manufacturing cars, but it was not known in what way he utilized them. In a statement to "Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering" the method is revealed.

An oil, comprising 23 per cent of the weight of the bean, is extracted by solvents and used in making baking enamels for body painting and as a binder for the casting sand in the foundry. The dry meal remaining is combined with formaldehyde to form a plastic used n makng gear-shift lever handles, ignition distributor covers, switches and other composition parts.

The formaldehyde combines with the protein in the meal, comprising 48 per cent of its weight, to form a resin. The meal also contains about 40 per cent carbohydrates and 7 per cent cellulose. In experimental work now under way, finer types of resins are made by extracting the carbohydrates. Plans are being worked out for using much larger quantities for resins.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Father Coughlin's Predecessor

Father Gabriel Richard (1767-1832) was born at Saintes, France, but had to flee Revolutionary France in 1792. At first he lived in Baltimore, whence he went to Detroit 6 years later. He became vicar general of the region, and almost at once became active as a highly eloquent preacher and reformer. He spoke every Sunday to mixed audiences on general principles of justice and morality, published the first newspaper in Michigan and the first Catholic periodical in the United States. In 1822, he was elected to the U.S. Congress, the only instance in which a Catholic priest ever held a seat there. He was defeated for reelection in 1824, and died of cholera in 1832.

60 Die In U.S. Floods; Large Areas Inundated

Rengo

ALBANY, N. Y., July 9—Thirty-six persons are dead and eight missing, while highways have been flooded to a depth of four to six feet, bridges and dams broken, houses destroyed and crops ruined by disastrous floods which have submerged large areas in New York State following torrential rains.

A further 24 persons are reported to have been killed and 400 injured as the outcome of two cloudbursts near Wheeler, Montana.

In New York, several rivers, including the Delaware, have overflowed their banks and caused havoc in all parts of the State. The latest casualty figures place the dead at 36 and the missing at eight. Among those unaccounted for is a nurse and two children who are believed to have been drowned when the cottage in which they were living at Geneva was swept into a lake by the raging flood waters.

Musical Moth Plays Own Elaborate 'Harp'

There is in North Queensland, Australia, what is known as "the whistling moth." A noted English zoologist says the male of this species displays one of the most remarkable sound producing organs discovered among the millions of butterflies and moths according to the Christian Science Monitor. It consists of an oblong, scaleless patch on the front wing, with a finely striated surface like a series of harp strings.

The moth produces a whistling sound by means of special spines on the front feet, which it draws over the keyboard. It has an extra long forefoot to enable it to strike the cords.

A preparedness demonstration of a different sort was held in Red Square, Moscow on June 30. There were no hundering tanks, no clanking tractor-drawn field guns and no clouds of giant bombing planes as in the military shows that since it began to feel itself threatened by war. Instead, this demonstration was of the physical fitness and alertness of the youth to help reinforce the Red Army if a serious conflict came, according to the New York Times correspondent.

So 110,000 young persons—and a few very young and a few quite old—marched through the historic square in shirts and trunks or simply in trunks and in hunting, skiing, aviation or whatever costumes were appropriate to their favorite sport.

The only military equipment shown were the planes that spelled out the name of Stalin in the sky, while the Soviet leader watched with his pipe in his hand as he stood on Lenin's tomb. And there were the guns and targets carried by the civilian sharpshooters and the machine guns that accompanied a volunteer Red Cross detachment.

But it was just as much a military demonstration and in many ways as impressive a one as the processions of mechanized war machines that lately have poured through Red Square on every great Soviet holiday.

The emphasis was on Mr. Stalin's declaration, "We must raise a new generation of workers—healthy, joyful and capable of increasing the power of the Soviet Union and of defending it from attacks." On the flower-bedecked "traders' row," across Red Square from Lenin's tomb, were such slogans, also created by Mr. Stalin, as:

"Personnel is all important" and "The most valuable of all capital in the world is people."

The marchers were just a sample of the 6,000,000 organized amateur athletes in the Soviet Union, of which 2,000,000 are women. But they served to illustrate how earnestly the government and the Communist party are promoting athletics and sports of all sorts as a specific defense measure as well as to make the people fitter for ordinary civilian pursuits. There is no people in the world today in whose lives sports play a more intimate part than in the Russians.

The paraders not only represented but demonstrated as they marched past Mr. Stalin and other Soviet leaders every sport from chess to parachute-jumping and from archery to mountain-climbing. And the range of ages was from 3-year-old acrobats, who tumbled on a moving platform, to an old man with a long white beard who marched in a group of gymnasts.

The columns of young men and women in gymnasium suits were punctuated now and then with floats, on which young men and, oftener, young women posed in symbolic attitudes, giving a slight "George White tone" to the proceedings. But it was all intensely serious.

The parade emphasized that the Soviet Union was rearing a generation of young persons who lack entirely that hopeless, bentshouldered shuffle that one notes in so many of their elders. The young persons are fine physical specimens, mentally alert and enthusiastic.

The majority of them are not handsome by American standards. One sees astonishingly few girls, for instance, who could be called pretty. Most of the Soviet youth of both sexes are short and stocky with strong legs and thick, full torsos.

Key Brothers End Record Air Flight

Pair Land After Making New Endurance Mark Of 27 Days 5 Hours And 33 Minutes

The Key brothers, landed their plane at Meridian, Miss., on July 1, after spending nearly one month in the air.

The brothers, Fred and Al Key went aloft on June 4. They broke the official endurance flight record on June 27 and passed to unofficial mark of Dale Jackson and Forest O'Brine by six hours and four minutes.

When they came down they had been in the air 27 days 5 hours and 33 minutes, a total of 653 hours and 33 minutes, according to the New York Times.

A crowd of thousands roared an ovation as the fliers brought their oil-spattered plane, the Ole Miss, to a safe landing on the soggy airport.

Tired, weary and "air groggy," they stepped from the monoplane, their "residence" of almost a month, and were greeted by resounding cheers.

At one second past 12:01 p.m. (Central standard time) today the fliers had been aloft continuously longer than man ever had before, and they appeared anxious to end the flight.

Early this morning they informed their ground crew, "We'll be down about 6:30 this afternoon."

Thursday at 3:13:30 p.m. the Key brothers exceeded the official sustained flight record of 553 hours 41 minutes and 30 seconds, held by another brother team, John and Kenneth Hunter of Chicago.

Throughout the day the fliers flew the "Ole Miss" in a wide circle high above Key Field, keeping the plane within easy landing distance of the airport. The last refueling was made at 7 a.m.

As word spread that the brothers expected to land roads leading to the airport began to fill with cars bearing enthusiastic friends.

Famous Rock At Niagara Blown Up

50,000 Watch 11,000-Ton Slice Of 'Honeymoon Point' Drop Into Horseshoe Falls

Two gigantic blasts of dynamite and black powder, witnessed by a crowd of 50,000 Dominion Day visitors, tore an 11,000-ton slice off Table Rock at the Canadian tip of Horseshoe Falls on July 1 and sent it crashing to the gorge below with a rumbling roar.

The blasts reduced the rock, famous ledge from which honeymooners viewed the Niagara Falls and often called "Honeymoon Point," to half its former size. The explosions were part of the precautionary work by the Niagara Parks Commission to guard against possible rock slides from a one-inch crack that extends 200 feet along the table. Officials had feared the rock would give way while people were standing on it, says the New York Times.

The first explosion was a disappointment to most of the holiday crowd gathered at all possible vantage points on the American and Canadian sides of the gorge.

A heavy mist was blowing off the Falls, causing a rainbow in the river below in the bright sun, when John J. Gardner, general engineer, gave the signal to throw the switch igniting the charge.

A sharp crack like a pistol, a puff of smoke, a slight rumble and 5,000 tons slid into the gorge below. Only a few of the sight-seers, almost clinging to the extreme edge of the Canadian bank, were able to get a good view of the rock as it fell.

Mixed in the first blast were 378 pounds of black powder and 27 pounds of dynamite, the ratio being nine pounds of powder to three of dynamite in each of forty-two holes drilled twenty feet into the rock at two-foot intervals in a straight line.

As if to appease the crowd's hunger for a thrill, the second blast at 6 P. M., Eastern standard time, three hours after the first, was far more spectacular.

The same ratio explosives was used but there were eight more holes in the line, causing 6,000 tons of rock to fall.

Viewed from a power plant at the bottom of the gorge, the rock split away with a roar. Flames shot out. The rock seemed to pause as it suspended. A shaft of light appeared between the main rock and the blasted section and another quarter of the famous site gave way with a sharp echo.

Two more blasts were fired July 4. Engineers stated the blasts would not spoil the view of the falls but would prevent sightseers from standing directly over the boiling water in the gorge.

Rock slides have been common at the gorge, but only one affected the table. Part of its face, beneath the ledge, dropped to the river bank last Spring.

The largest slides in recent years have been from the falls, contours of both Canadian and American cataracts having been changed greatly by the "weathering" of the rock.

Preliminary to the July 1 blasts, engineers fired one on June 19 and another June 20 to remove top shale and allow drilling for the big charges of explosive.

Plane Is 'Heard' 720 Miles Away

New Detector Is Invented For British By American—Huge Horns Pick Up Sound

Despite the tremendous advances made in military aircraft, the defending forces have made even greater strides in radio detection of attacking forces, it was said on July 1 in New York City by an American engineer just returned from England, to the United States.

The engineer, Samuel S. Hixon, head of the Hixon Laboratories in London, explained the newest detector, which is the property of the British War Office. Tests have shown the detector to be accurate up to 720 miles in signaling the approach of airplanes, according to the New York Times.

The device is the result of nearly six years of research by Mr. Hixon and J. D. Wheeler, formerly of Chicago. The research, made in secret and financed by George Rose, head of the Great Universal Stores, Ltd., Britain's largest mail-order house, required the invention and assembly of eleven separate units, Mr. Hixon said.

Work Cost $55,000

The first design of the complete assembly was presented gratis to the British War Office by Mr. Rose, Mr. Hixon added, despite its cost of more than $55,000.

A second set is on its way to Washington for a demonstration to the United States War Department. Mr. Hixon will leave next week for Washington to conduct tests.

The machine reverses the principles now used to guide aircraft by radio beams. Great horns resembling electric amplifiers pick up on a beam the sound vibrations of aircraft motors. Automatically the horns turn into the line of the beam, and variometers and other apparatus behind the complicated board of the indicators covert the sound to show the distance from the source, the direction, the approximate altitude and the speed of flight.

By unscrambling multiple sound vibrations it is also possible to tell the approximate strength of the advancing force, the inventor said.

Inventor of Other Devices

Mr. Hixon, a native New Yorker and a graduate of Purdue University, is the inventor of many other optical and electrical devices, including automatic telephone and wireless circuits and photographic and telescopic apparatus. He plans to return to England when the American tests have been completed.

The United States has tested a similar device developed by the Sperry Gyroscope Company of Brooklyn for anti-aircraft work, but the Sperry concern does not make the claims of range and accuracy that are said to mark the British instrument.

Mr. Hixon said that the only necessary secret in his device was the manner in which friendly and enemy aircraft were to be distinguished in time of war. A small transmitter, with a secret signal, is to be installed on all British aircraft, he said.

Under Doctor's Orders

The inventor was confined to his room in the Hotel Lincoln yesterday and he will be under a physician's orders for high blood pressure and other ailments that resulted from his years of work on the device.

Mr. Hixon marveled at the espionage systems of European nations and said that his office in London had been visited by representatives of France, Germany, Czechoslovakia and other nations. Representatives of Italy called at his room here, he said, shortly after he had arrived. He said that the development of the instrument had been a strictly guarded secret and that he was at a loss to understand how those governments had learned of him or of his device.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Dog Express

In 1844, two Englishmen established what they called a "caniposte" between Blankenberghe and Bruges, Belgium. Four whippets harnessed to a railroad car regularly carried fish over the distance of 10 miles in record time. A dead rabbit was fastened in front of them, and they were not allowed to feast upon it until after their run was completed. For the rapid transportation of mail over the same route, two whippets were harnessed to a lighter express car, with a stuffed rabbit dangling before them. Hunger supplied the motive power in both cases. The caniposte was in satisfactory operation for quite a few years.

A Record in "Bookkeeping"

In 1883 Victor H. Middleton, pharmacist of Grand Rapids, Mich., loaned a book, "Wythe's Pocket Dose Book", to one of his apprentices. It was not returned until 1933, when the apprentice's son gave it back to Mr. Middleton's son, Louis V., who still operates the drug store in Grand Rapids.

British Fail To Produce Rival Of U.S. Air Liner

The British government's recent offer of a $125,000 prize for the firm producing the best medium-sized commercial air liner to compete with the American Douglas hasn't received any response from the British aircraft industry.

It is reported that the offer has elicited little more than a hearty laugh from the men who build Great Britain's planes, according to the New York Herald Tribune. They know that about $400,000 was spent on research and experiment and trials before the Douglas was ready to surpass its European rivals.

At least eighty of the big twin-motored American liners are reported to have been sold in Europe. Switzerland is the latest nation to adopt them for mail and passenger lines.

Octogenarians Play Ball; Umpire, 100, Ball Boy, 97

Octogenarian athletes took part in a contest at Spring Valley, N. Y., on July 2, when 109 inmates of the Home of the Sons and Daughters of Israel, 232 East Tenth Street, New York City, held their annual outing.

The feature of this year's excursion was a practice session for the baseball team composed of the men of the home. Tobias Wildstein, 109 years old, was the umpire. On last year's excursion to Dover, N. J., Tobias donned a bathing suit, and went swimming, says the New York Times.

The coach of the team, which is being organized to challenge other teams from the city's homes, is Nathan Mann, who is 89 and plays first base. Sam Kriegshaber, 93, plays left field, and Max Rendar, 84, right field. Nathan Rockover, 75, will be in the pitcher's box hurling them over to Joseph Zert, 84, the catcher. Abraham Diamond, named for a bat boy, earned the position by virtue of his name and his 97 years.

Tsingtao Japanese To Present Plane To Army

Rengo

TSINGTAO, July 23—Japanese residents in Tsingtao will shortly present the Japanese Navy with a patriotic naval plane, it is announced here today. The dedication will be made through the office of the Japanese naval resident officers stationed in Tsingtao.

It is revealed that the Japanese residents have contributed ¥31,572 toward the funds opened for this purpose. The plane, which has recently been completed, will be christened "Tsingtao" by Vice-Admiral Gengo Hyakutake, Commander-in Chief of the Third Squadron of the Japanese Navy, at a ceremony to be held on board the warship, Kuma, next Sunday. The Kuma is now lying at anchor in the port here.

Italians Report Peru Favorable Wheat Country

Experts, Employed By Bank, Tour 8,200 Miles To Survey Likely Grain Land

Peru is destined to become an important wheatproducing country, according to an Italian agricultural commission, which for some time has been in Peru investigating wheat-growing possibilities.

The commission, which has sent to that country through the action of the Banco Italiano of Lima, consists of Professor Amadeo Consolini, director of the School of Agriculture of Pistoia, and Dr. Augusto Modena, an assistant in the same school, says the New York Herald Tribune.

At present there are approximately 300,000 acres under wheat in Peru, yielding an average production of between 73,000 to 84,000 tons a year. The average yield an acre approximates ten bushels. As consumption is in the neighborhood of 200,000 tons annually, the balance has to come from abroad, principally Argentina and Australia. Imports last year amounted to 127,155 tons.

Three Problems Face Nation

Three problems have to be solved before Peru can become self-supporting in wheat. They are topographical, economic and technical. The commission has studied these points with care in the course of a tour of 8,200 miles through the principal wheat districts, and the opinion is expressed that none of them present insurmountable difficulties.

The topographical problem arises from the distances, which in many instances separate the wheat lands from important centers of consumption, and from lack of roads; and the commission holds that in very case these districts must settle their own wheat problems in such a manner that, after satisfying its own requirements, each department or province can supply the needs of the nearest neighbors.

The commission especially was impressed by the possibilities which the Department of Arequipa opens up for a considerably increased production. Actually, the area under wheat in that department is about 7,500 acres, yielding in good years an average of forty bushels an acre, which is considerably above the average for the whole country. With the completion of the irrigation works at La Joya, an additional area of potential wheat production, approximating 50,000 acres, could be brought under cultivation.

Can Intensify Production

A specially favorable feature of this new agricultural district is that, situated at an altitude of about 3,900 feet above sea level, it is less liable to be affected by frosts. Wheat production also can be intensified throughout the southern sierra regions.

In the center, the valleys of Jauja and Huancayo offer splendid promise for a considerably increased wheat production, as soon as they have been brought under irrigation with the abundant waters of the Mantaro River. Actually, Junin produces a greater quantity of wheat than any other department in Peru, production in 1933 being 15,666 tons, as against 10,814 tons from the Department of Ancas, the next biggest producer.

The outlook for wheat cultivation on the coast, with the exception of certain zones, is "distinctly unfavorable" in the opinion of the commission. The extremely high relative humidity (with a monthly average ranging between 70 and 80) and the frequency of mists, added to the constantly favorable to wilt, causing heavy losses, amounting in some cases to 100 per cent. Nevertheless, in certain departments such as Piura, Lambayeque and La Libertad the commission holds that it is not only possible to cultivate wheat but to produce a wheat of superior quality to any that comes from the sierra.

Italians Get Co-operation

The interest which the government of Peru is taking in increasing the national production has been evidenced by the facilities which were offered to the Italian commission and the readiness which has been evinced to accept the suggestions made in their report. In this connection President Oscar R. Benavides in a message broadcast to the nation said:

"Total extension of land to be benefited by irrigation works, either undertaken or completed by my government, is 265,000 acres. The works of La Joya in the Department of Arequipa will bring a considerable area under cultivation, commencing next year with 15,000 acres. In Chimbote it is planned to irrigate some 10,000 acres, in La Esperanza some 7,500 acres and in Huancayo, Jauja and Puquio some 45,000 acres.

"The wheat campaign which my government is carrying out, based on the most scientific methods, is giving excellent results both for producers and consumers. The Italian experts who came expressly to study our different zones have made a most useful and encouraging report."

Cuban Army Thwarts Red Revolutionary Plot

The discovery of a Communist revolutionary plot centering in the Realengo district near Guantanamo in Orinete Province, with ramifications in Satiago, Guantanamo, Havana and other towns, was revealed on July 1 by the military authorities at Santiago.

Directed by persons outside Cuba, plans were under way, according to army officials, to size the Realengo district, where a clash was narrowly averted between armed squatters and the army. Several arrests were made and others expected, says the New York Times.

Military men assert in formation they have obtained indicates the Communist organizations have more than 1,000 adherents.

Tricky War Craft Flown By Britons

Latest Designs In Military And Commercial Planes Exhibited At Hendon

Great Britain showed the world her latest wares in military and commercial aircraft at the Society of British Aircraft Constructors' fourth annual trade display at Hendon on July 1. The exhibition was attended by more than 3,000 air experts representing 50 countries, says the New York Times.

At a luncheon following three hours of flying of forty of the newest machines, military and civil, by crack test pilots, Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, Secretary for Air, declared:

"I have heard it said that, because we are expanding the air force, it will be impossible to meet fresh orders. Nothing is further from the truth. I have it on authority and I know the capacity and resiliency of the British aircraft industry is such that I have not the least doubt that it will fulfill everything in the government's program and everything in connection with foreign contracts."

Among the new airplane engines flown was a Bristol Bull Pup fighter, the first airplane fitted with the new Aquila 495-horsepower sleeve-valve engine of the same type as the latest Bristol Bull Dog using a Mercury engine of 645 horsepower. The performance of the lower-powered machine was surprisingly close to the Bull Dog's, particularly in climbing and fast maneuvers. The new engine is quieter as well as simpler in construction.

Another new fighter not seen publicly before is the Fairey Fantome, designed especially as a Belgian fighter after a competition. It is fitted with a Canon motor capable of well over 250 miles an hour. The object of the demonstrations, however, was less to reveal its high speed than to show its ability to perform quickly all movements required of a fighter.

The latest Hawker fighter also was impressive in the display, specializing in almost vertical climbs and upward rolls.

One of the surprises was a Supermarine Seagull 5 amphibian, recently adopted for service with the fleet air arm, showing a remarkable power to maneuver and affording the unusual sight of a flying boat looping.

Also impressive was the performance of an Armstrong-Whitworth Scimitar Standard fighter of the Norwegian air force, in a good example of an inverted climb.

Meanwhile 360 British Royal Air Force machines from thirty-eight squadrons arrived at Mildenhall today in readiness for tomorrow's first rehearsal of a great review of the air force by King George on Saturday. The landing lasted six hours, affording the high command valuable information on the time required for mass wartime mobilization. The Suffolk village that was the starting point for the England-to-Australia air race witnessed the greatest massing of aircraft that had ever taken place in Great Britain.

Son Of President Of China Is Wed To American Girl

Father Objects To Marriage Of James Lin, Student At Ohio State U.

James Lin, adopted son of Mr. Lin Sen, President of the National Government of China was married on July 14 to Miss Viola Brown, Columbus, Ohio, "five-an-ten-cent" store girl, at Ashland, Kentucky, it was revealed by Justice of the Peace Gordon Ireson of the latter city on July 16. The Chinese is a student at Ohio State University.

The justice announced that he had performed the ceremony uniting the young Chinese with the 23-year-old American girl, according to an article appearing in the North China Daily News.

This town, located a short distance south of the Ohio state border, is a favorite rendezvous for Ohio couples desirous of getting married without publicity.

How Romance Started

When James Lin lost his pocket-book in a "five-and-ten-cent" store in Columbus, Ohio, recently, he little knew that this circumstance would win for him a bride.

The missing pocket-book was found by one of the shop-girls Viola Brown, who promptly had it returned to its rightful owner.

James Lin became interested in the girl, a feeling which soon became mutual, and the result was seen when the young man took out a licence to marry her.

James told newspapermen that he had written a letter to his father informing him of his engagement.—

Mr. Lin said on July 16 that he will not be married until he has obtained his father's consent, states another report. He expects a letter from his father on the matter "in about six weeks."

Conflicting Statements

Miss Viola Brown, whose marriage to Mr. James Lin has been successively affirmed and denied, settled the question on July 7, when she admitted that she was no longer Miss Viola Brown, but, instead, Mrs. James Lin.

The erstwhile clerk of a Columbus five-and-ten-cent store verified the announcement previously made by Justice of the Peace Gordon Ireson, of Ashland, Ky., that he had married the couple last Sunday. Her declaration contradicted a statement made earlier in the day by Mr. Lin, in which he denied that the ceremony had been performed and insisted that he was waiting the blessing of his foster-father, Mr. Lin Sen.

Young Mr. Lin could not be reached for a statement after the Young lady's announcement.

The ceremony was performed by a local justice of the peace, Mr. Ireson, who stated that he had married the couple by virtue of a licence they had obtained in the neighboring town of Catlettsburg, Kentucky.

Mr. Ireson added that the couple had told him they intended to return to Catlettsburg and then leave for Detroit.

Previous Marriages Denied

Mr. James Lin strenuously denied reports circulated in Shanghai that he had already been twice married in China, when interviewed in New York City on July 18.

President Disapproves

Mr. Lin Sen, President of the National Government and foster-father of Mr. K. M. James Lin, whose marriage to an American girl has created widespread interest both in America and China, is not in favor of the young man's matrimonial step.

Mr. Lin, who was spending a brief holiday at Kuling, on July 18 expressed himself briefly but tersely in regard to the reported marriage of his 23-year-old adopted son at Ashland, Kentucky, on July 14.

Replying to an inquiry by the United Press as to his reaction to the marriage, Mr. Lin telegraphed, "Concerning the matter of which you asked, I do not approve."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Lace Eater

Madeleine d'Arsant de Puisieux, of Paris (1720-1798) one of the earliest blue stockings, was the wife of Philippe Florent, a famous French man of letters. Madame Puissieux was a prolific writer and her merit was recognized by the French Revolution, which gave her a pension of 2000 francs. The recognition did not reconcile her, however, to the novel way of Revolutionary thinking. She was particularly apprehensive that after her death, the irreverent heirs might sell an old family heirloom, a collection of Brussels lace valued at $50,000. Her plan to prevent it was as novel as it was bizarre. Within 45 years prior to her death, she contrived to literally "consume" her collection of lace by eating portions of it with her daily meals. This curious addition to her diet must have hastened her death, via the indigestion route.

Minimum Living

Though times are admittedly hard and incomes greatly reduced a simple lesson is given by the family who not only existed on a total yearly income of $5.00 in 1934 but actually succeeded in saving $1.85 of that amount.

Robert Sexton and his wife live near Maynardville, Tenn., in the area to be flooded when the Norris Dam is completed. Last year their little farm, with livestock valued at $2.50, brought them a total income of $5.00 and their total expenditures for the year amounted to only $3.15.

Coast-to-Coast Twice A Day

Teaching morning classes on the Pacific Coast in the morning and afternon classes on the Atlantic is only possible in the Panama Canal Zone. J. C. Swanson of Balboa, Canal Zone, teaches at the Balboa High School on the Pacific side in the morning then catches a train at noon to teach at the Cristobal High School, looking out over the Atlantic, in the afternoon.

Such coast-to-coast daily hops might be possible across the United States very soon, if they keep bettering the trans-continental airplane records, going from one ocean to the other through the stratosphere!

Study Of Aurora Makes Headway

Whole Ring Of Arctic Stations Specialize In Taking Photos Of Phenomenon

The study of the aurora borealis has been the absorbing interest of Professor Karl Stormer's life. For about thirty years he has been watching the shimmering, crackling draperies that hang over the Pole. What causes them? How high are they?

To answer, the late Professor Kristian Birkeland made some beautiful experiments which convinced him that the auroras of the arctic and antarctic regions are produced by electrical particles hurled forth by the sun. As they strike the upper level of the earth's thin atmosphere the particles ionize atoms of air, which means that they damage them. A wrecked atom rushes about seeking fragments wherewith to repair itself. In the process it glows with trepidation.

There is no guessing about this, says the New York Times. Beautiful auroras can be reproduced in glass tubes on earth. So far as the physicist can tell, they are good reproductions in miniature of the vast sheets of light that flutter in splendor overhead in the polar regions.

Stormer became interested when he was called upon to make a mathematical study of the phenomenon that Birkeland produced experimentally. The next step was to compare the results of the mathematical analysis with observations of the aurora itself. That was in 1909. Stormer did not know it, but his lifework was cut out for him.

Just watching the aurora with the eye is not a satisfactory proceeding. As far back as 1892 two German scientists, Brendel and Baschin, managed to photograph an auroral curtain with an exposure of only seven seconds. Stormer took up the lead and in the end revolutionized the whole technique. Now the Norwegians have a fine observatory at Tromso, and the International Geodetic and Geophysical Union has sponsored a whole ring of arctic stations which specialize in auroral photography.

A Special Camera

The most important instrument in measuring auroral arcs, streamers and draperies and fixing their location is camera devised by Stormer many years ago. It takes six pictures successively on one plate.

To measure the height of an aurora Stormer applies astronomical methods. Two cameras are set up miles apart, both trained on a star. Its image therefore appears in the same position on the photographs made by the two cameras. Not so the aurora. It is much nearer and hence its position will not be the same on the two sets of photographs. By comparing the measurements made photographically at points that may be from twenty to 200 miles apart it is possible to calculate the height and dimensions of a curtain. Of course the two photographers must agree on the time when they are to make their exposures. The telephone makes that possible.

And the result of all this patient photographing? Guessing has given place to facts. The lower fringe of an aurora hangs from sixty to seventy miles above the earth, though sometimes it may be as low as twenty-seven and as high is 625 miles. The very high auroras are illuminated by sunshine, strange as that may seem. Probably these sunlit rays will give new and important information about the upper atmosphere and thus aid the weather prophet.

LaGuardia Wins In Suit To Cut Off His Salary

also contemplated the performance of legislative and executive functions not required of Mr. La Guardia.

Corporation Counsel Windels on behalf of the Mayor opposed the suit partly on the contention that Chapter 732 of the Laws of 1933, as amended by Chapter 585 of the Laws of 1935, suspended these provisions of the law alleged to have been violated by the Mayor. On this point Justice Cotillo said:

"It is evident that the spirit and general purpose of these statutes are to encourage and promote the fullest possible participation by public officials throughout the State in all Federal projects initiated under the Works Relief Bill. A holding that the public-spirited conduct of the Mayor, in accepting non-remunerative membership on the Advisory Committee on Allotments, deprived him of his office as Mayor, is one which should be reached, if at all, only with the greatest reluctance, and solely because the clear wording of the statute permits of no other determination. No such state of affairs exists here. Membership on the Advisory Committee on Allotments may not reasonably be said to constitute the holding of a civil office under the Government of the United States.

"Reference is made to the wide and perhaps indiscreet publicity given to the plans of the Mayor to spend one or two days a week in Washington and to the fact that permanent headquarters for him had been rented in that city. Even assuming this publicity to be an accurate representation of fact, it is nevertheless utterly irrelevant to the issues in the case.

"The question is whether the Mayor had ipso facto forfeited his office by acceptance of another public office within the purview of Section 1549. Neglect of duty, no matter how serious, cannot have this result. It may be made the basis of charges before the Governor, and if proved, lead to his removal. It cannot, however, be construed as automatic resignation of his office, unless he has actually assumed another public office.

Performing Patriotic Duty

"It is unfortunate that the Mayor's acceptance of his designation by the President has even in a small measure jeopardized his right to continue to hold office as Mayor of the city of New York. In the great public emergency, local as well as national, in which we all now find ourselves, it was the Mayor's patriotic duty to aid the head of our government in any way which the latter, in his own discretion, might deem advisable. Moreover, the Mayor's participation in the meetings and recommendations of the advisory committee would unquestionably tend to assist and benefit the city of New York as well as other municipalities and the public generally."

Justice Cotillo not only denied an injunction to prohibit Controller Taylor from paying the Mayor's salary but granted the application by the defendants to dismiss the complaint. In doing so the court ruled against the Mayor's contention that since the action involved the test of title to the office of Mayor, such issue should be determined in a quo warranto proceeding instead of in a taxpayer's. In holding that this contention "was not well taken," Justice Cotillo referred to the decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of Kelly v. Common Council. In the Kelly case an Alderman of the former City of Brooklyn had accepted election to the House of Representatives and the Court of Appeals ruled that his acceptance ipso facto vacated his other office.

Although ruling against the Mayor on this point, Justice Cotillo said "there can be no need for resorting to quo warranto proceedings, since the material facts are not in dispute." The court added: "On the other hand, the complaint is insufficient in that it fails to set forth facts showing that the Mayor accepted another civil office."

Persia Making Strides To Be Modern Nation

indicated, a marked improvement. The vain pursuit of a paper agreement has for years tended to weaken British diplomacy and to defeat its own end. Now that this is in abeyance and questions are dealt with on their own merits as they arise, the air is clearer.

Transformation

The outward changes in Teheran are immense. A great wide road has been driven through the town from south to north, straight up to Shimran and the mountain face. Stamboul Street, which runs east and west, crossing the Street of the Tulip Bed (Lalazar) and the Ala-ed-Dowleh, and along the entire south wall of the British Legation to the ramparts, is a wide thoroughfare lined with new shops and paved with dressed stone setts, on which the sound of innumerable pairs of trotting horses repeat the rhythm of old Vienna or Bucharest like castanets in a dream. There are plenty of motors, but the droshky still holds its own. A few of the old curiosity shops in the Street of the Tulip Bed are still there, but most of it has been completely rebuilt. The Ala-ed-Dowleh, always wide, is now being widened, and a promenade with trees runs down the center dividing the traffic, which everywhere is controlled by policemen on point duty.

The great Drill Square (Mashk Maidan) is no longer open, but is being covered with public buildings. Gun Square, rebuilt, is surrounded by fine Government offices and the imposing new Imperial Bank of Persia. The center has been enclosed and built upon, and all four sides make a stand for taxicabs and a halt for motor-omnibuses, of which you may see 20 in line. The south-west the Durbar quarter has been reconstructed and is occupied by Ministries. On the south-west corner Nasiriye Street also has been remade and a slice of the old bazaar has gone. Most of that picturesque place fortunately remains, but I fear more of it is doomed, as a great road is to be cut through it. Eastwards, again, is a wide avenue with much traffic of omnibuses.

Rampart and walls have gone on the north of the city, and from the Pigeon Tower to Doshan Teppe roads there is a great process of transformation. Shimran has numerous smart new villas. Beyond the British Summer Legation at Gulhek the road runs through a transformed Tajrish, with a circus to divide the traffic, cafes for gossipers, and in summer cabaret.

Everywhere one sees building and road-making. A dead straight road in the old Imperial way has been driven from Teheran to the Shah's home in Mazanderan, and incidentally some excellent fishing in the Chalus River is thereby made accessible from Teheran. There seems to be work for all. I scarcely saw a beggar, for the decrepit are taken off the streets and housed most of the year, though I am told they are still turned loose in the coldest part of the winter, as fuel cannot be afforded for them. In the provinces, however, the beggar nuisance is worse than ever. At Hamadan I counted 17—men, women, and children—who surrounded the car immediately it halted. While I was in Teheran the Mejliss voted £40,000 without discussion for townplanning in Isfahan.

The Pehlevi Cap

The black or brown 'aba, or gown, formerly worn by men, with the kula as headgear, has disappeared, being in fact forbidden. European dress for men is now universal in Teheran. The Pehlevi cap, though common wear, is being discouraged; the intention is that it should come to be regarded as reserved for members of the Royal Family, the general public being expected to wear ordinary European hats. Tribesmen are to be seen on the road wearing a European hat above their familiar blue home-spun clothes. The chadar appears to be retained for its coquettish charm; many wear it, not in the old fashion, but as an Indian lady wears her sari.

The taxes, which, of course, are considered heavy, are collected; even the proudest tribes have been compelled to pay arrears. Revenue, aided by the Anglo-Persian royalty, has greatly increased. The Budget is balanced and the finances are in order. Not only the Army but all Government servants get their pay regularly at the end of the month. Inasmuch as State employees and others are given to understand that it is their duty to support the National Bank, its business is rapidly growing. On the site of the old Russian bank in the Ala-ed-Dowleh are fine new Government Treasury buildings.

Socially Teheran moves with the times, but retains its own atmosphere. Japanese, Danish, and Czechoslovak Legations form additions to the Diplomatic Corps. Unfortunately there is of late much less social intercourse between Persians and the members of the corps, and since the fall of Teymourtash the old Imperial Club, which now has a new name, is not the cheerful rendezvous it was. Intimacies are frowned on in high quarters, and inter-dining with faranghis is strictly regulated by a protocol. Officers below the rank of colonel are not supposed to have any dealing with the Legations. Polo and games on an international basis are discouraged.

Yet the old life goes on, the wistaria on the garden front of the British Legation is showing its delicate color as lavishly as ever, the judas trees glow red, the almond trees flourish, the wild hyacinths and purple irises are in their old profusion, and the torrents of spring pour down from Shimran.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Extemplary Sea Captain

Captain Peter Johnson, now 75 years of age, was a mere boy of 15 when he shipped as deck boy on a full rigged ship sailing from Tonsberg, Norway, and has been a seaman ever since. For 48 years he has been master of his vessels, yet has never found it necessary to use profanity in exercising his duties over crews of men to whom swearing means nothing. Neither has he use for liquor tobacco. And at the time my cartoon was drawn, he had never seen a movie, but on May 13th, he was shown the moving pictures of himself taken during the launching of his new vessel, the Floating Hospital of St. John's Guild. "Wonderful", was all he could say.

"Floating Power"

To better appreciate the enormous electric power of the new S. S. "Normandie", engineers of the General Electric Co., who were consultants in the designing and building of this largest of all liners, have figured that if the 160,000 hosepower generated in her hulk were used for other purposes than to propel and light the vessel, it would be enough electricity to take care of the light, heat and power requirements of a city the size of Boston. Or, it would equal the energy of 100 steam locomotives, operate 140,000 radio broadcasting stations, or propel 10 average Atlantic passenger ships. I have just crossed the Atlantic on the "Normandie", but space does not permit me to tell what a great ship she is.

Kiel Olympic Home Opened For Yachtsmen

The Olympic Home in Kiel was opened and used for the first time during the Yachting Week from June 16th to June 22nd. It is the first of the many buildings planned for the Olympic Games to reach completion. Eight weeks were required to erect it.

The Olympic Home will serve as quarters for the majority of the yachtsmen who come to the Olympic Regatta next August 4th to August 14th. The principal day in these events will be Tuesday, August 11th, when the members of the International Olympic Committee, of the German Olympic Commission, and of the Organizing Committee, as well as many other officials, will journey from Berlin to Kiel to see the races.

At the close of the regattas on Saturday, August 15th, the yachtsmen will be given the opportunity to travel to Berlin so that they may be present at the Olympic Stadium when the prizes are distributed.

the presentation of musical comedies and operattas; the Yurakuza Theater for the presentation of drama both modern and classic; Hibiya Gekijo for moving pictures; Nippon Gekijo for moving pictures; Gineiza for moving pictures. In Osaka, Yokohama. Nagoya, Kobe and Kyoto are further Toho chain houses, while further theatres are planned in the other large cities of the empire.

It is all the more credit to Mr. Kobayashi that when he introduced the girls opera in Japan he met with little encouragement, the public having little taste for such occidentalized amusement. Mr. Kobayashi saw, however, that, with the modernization and occientalization of Japan, public taste in amusement would also change and hence laid the foundations for his present success in this some 20 years ago.

Interested in U. S. S. R.

Referring to his coming trip, Mr. Kobayashi stated that he was most interested in seeing the great Dniepoul hydro-electric generating plants in Soviet Russia, in connection with plans for the building of two more genertaing plants for the Tokyo Electric Light Plant with a power capacity of 75,000 kilowatts each and a hydro-electric plant of 300,000 kilowatts each and a hydro-electric plant of 300,000 kilowatts in Japan.

"I am interested in seeing the various industries which are building and planned in connection with the vast hydro-electric plants in Soviet Russia," continued Mr. Kobayashi "Such information will be of great use in consideration of problems which will surely arise in Japan in the near future. I shall return to Japan about March next year. I hope I will also have time to see something of the fine and industrial arts abroad."

Mr. Kobayashi was appointed a State councillor to the Investigation Bureau of the Cabinet in June. In view of Mr. Kobayashi's past record and activities, the Japanese public is looking forward with much interest to the fruits of his coming journey abroad.

Book Says Helen Of Troy Supplied London's Name

The theory that London was named after Helen of Troy is offered by Harold Bayley, author of a new study of ancient London. He takes issue with writers who contend there was no town here before the Roman occupation in 43 A. D.

In Bayley's book an ancient legend that London was founded by Trojans is recalled. At any rate there was supposed to have been a shrine to a Helen, presumably the famous Trojan heroine, on the hill now surmounted by St. Paul's Cathedral, says the New York Herald Tribune. Before the Romans built a temple to Diana there, this Helen, like her successor, was portrayed as a huntress with a greyhound beside her.

There were Cockneys even in early Celtic times, it is contended. They dropped their "h's" just as the London Cockneys do today. As a result Helen became Ellen.

The Celtic word for hill was "don." Thus, Ellendon, then Ellondon and finally London, says Bayley.

Victorian Idea Of Education Scoffed

Lloyd George Praises Modern Method Of Teaching Girls In Address At School

Mr. Lloyd George scoffed at the Victorian idea of education for girls and praised the modern conception of it when he spoke at the speech day St. Felix School, Southwold, on June 29. His granddaughter is a pupil at the school.

He recalled that the school was founded just at the time "when the prim and grim Victorian era was coming to an end." The girls' seminaries of that period were narrow in their outlook and had stuffy rooms, inadequate and even incompetent staffs, and practically no equipment at all; no very special care for health and recreation, according to The Times, London.

The education of girls in those days was based largely on two assumptions. The first was that the real education was a mannish business and had nothing to do with girls; that it was unsuitable to their mentality, to their careers and to their carriage, and that it was a disfiguring business. The second was that all girls had the same disposition and ought to be trained and treated in exactly the same way. The great ideal was gentility, which is another name for snobbishness, and the achievement of something which was known in those days as accomplishment—to strum and drum the piano. In the more advanced schools they were allowed to draw. So far as literature was concerned, they were confined generally to Jane Austen and the expurgated edition of Shakespeare. And that was called education for girls in those days!

The theory was that real education converted a woman into that repellant horror which was known as a blue-stocking. It was not as if they were trained in domestic economy, because they were not. In fact, the old academies for young ladies—they were not girls in those days—at best were an expensive joke, and at their worst they were an atrocity. The old days of the song "The Lass with a Delicate Air" had disappeared in the new concept of education. Today the sphere of the activities, of the influence and the responsibilities of women in the life of the nation was wider than it had ever been, and it was widening from year to year. In commerce, in the professions, in politics, women were taking part. It was part of the revolution caused by that most tremendous earthquake in human affairs, the full effect of which had not yet been realized—the Great War.

Women now constituted a majority. The decision depended upon them even more than upon men. In those conditions it was vital that the best training should be given to them in every sphere, but above all in the training of their faculties. That was one of the few democratic countries left in the world. It would remain so even if all took the other course. The reason why it would continue to be so was because every man and woman would exercise his and her vote with a sense of responsibility. That intelligence and training which they were getting was a vital contribution to the good government of the land, upon which the fate of civilization depended more than upon the voice of any other country under the sun at this moment.

Eden Reports To Lower House On Visit To Rome

portance or ascribe the same urgency to the various items of the program, it should be possible to agree upon a method whereby, in free and equal negotiation with other Governments, they might unite to contribute to a solution of the problems.

Turning to the dispute between Italy and Abyssinia, Mr. Eden stated that he expressed to Signor Mussolini the grave concern which the British Government felt at the turn which events were taking, and said that the British attitude was not egoistic and was not dictated by our interests in Africa but by our membership of the League of Nations. He made it clear to Signor Mussolini that British policy was founded upon the League and that the British Government could not remain indifferent to events which might profoundly affect the League's future. Upon that issue public opinion in Great Britain felt very strongly. Only through collective security, in the judgment of the Government, could peace be preserved and only through the League could Great Britain play her full part in Europe.

Mr. Eden then explained that he had put before Signor Mussolini a constructive contribution which the Government had in mnd as a means of settling the dispute. The British Government were prepared to offer to Abyssinia a strip of territory in British Somaliland giving Abyssinia access to the sea. The proposal was intended to facilitate such territorial and economic concessions by Abyssinia to Italy as might have been involved in an agreed settlement. The British Government would ask for no concession in return save grazing rights for the tribes in the ceded territory. The suggestion was not lightly made and only the gravity of the stuation could justify it, but it did not commend itself to Signor Mussolini as a basis for the solution of the dispute. Mr. Eden added that on his return to Paris he gave M. Laval an account of what had passed with Signor Mussolini.

A Difficult Issue

Mr. Lansbury asked when the House would have an opportunity of debating the matters that were discussed with the French Prime Minister and when the Government would tell Parliament what steps they proposed to bring pressure of public opinion to bear upon Italy. He had particularly in mind the "long period of drift" which preceded Japan's fait accompli in the Far East. Sir Samuel Hoare refused to amplify Mr. Eden's statement, not because he wished to withhold information from the House, but because he was anxious to avoid prejudicing a difficult issue. He indicated, however, but without giving a pledge, that further information would be given when opportunity for debate arose.

Mr. Dickie urged that Parliament should be consulted before British territory was ceded. Feeling in some parts of the House was ruffled by Sir Samuel Hoare's rejoinder that the Government must be trusted, but it was somewhat soothed when he pointed out that the offer to Italy was tentative, and was part of an attempt to settle an urgent and critical situation that might have disastrous reactions. He assured members that there was no question of the Government going behind the back of the House.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Oldest High School Student

During the winter term of the McKinley High School in Canton, Ohio, A. E. Stewart, age 72, took up his studies in the night school art classes, and at the time laid his claims to "the oldest public school pupil in Ohio—or even the U.S.A." Mr. Stewart's remarkable progress in his art studies is shown in the cartoon he drew of himself which I reproduced in my cartoon about him.

Social and Personal Notes

MISSION CONFERENCE

The 76th annual meeting of the Presbyterian (U.S.A.) Mission in Japan came to a close Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. J. G. Dunlop in Karuizawa.

The final program was in the form of an entertainment. Following a number of vocal duets by Misses Dena Nettinga and Mary Miles, a one act skit "Lima Beans" was presented by Miss Alice Grube and Miss Grace Hereford. After Mrs. Daniel C. Buchanan sang a number of solos, the members of the Hokkaido station staged an original novelty song. Games under the direction of Miss Grace Hereford continued until late in the evening.

This session marked the beginning of a new method of holding meetings in the history of the Presbyterian mission. Last year, definite forward steps were taken whereby much of the administrative work of the foreigners was turned over to the Church of Christ in Japan. To represent the Japanese workers closely associated with the missionary enterprise, three of the pastors, the Rev. Mr. Tada of Shikoku, the Rev. Mr. Wada of Hiroshima, and the Rev. Mr. Goshi of Tokyo were present at this year's sessions.

Tuesday evening, the opening sermon was preached by the Rev. Martel A. Tremain, located at Nokkeushi, after which the regular matters of business were considered. These items were continued over the second day, the formal business session closing Wednesday night.

Thursday morning, Miss Virginia Mackenize of Shimonoseki led a fellowship discussion dealing with the life situations faced by the members of the mission in schools, in the field, and in the countless other areas where missionaries are working in Japan. The afternoon session was in the nature of a meeting of the Oxford Group. The session was closed with the administration of the sacrement of the Lord's Supper with the Rev. Dr. Reischauer presiding.

The moderator for the coming year will be the Rev. David P. Martin of Osaka.

TO ATTEND TENNIES MEET

Baroness de Bassompierre with her son, Jean, is at the Embassy's villa at Lake Chuzenji since July 10. Mme Iwelns d'Eeckhoutte is staying with her. Baron de Bassompierre spends weekends with his family. The whole party will spend a few days at Karuizawa for the lawn tennis tournament staying at Baron and Baroness J. Baeyens; Jean de Bassompierre will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Mikimoto at their villa.

GUEST OF HONOR

Mrs. Y. Shimanouchi, wife of the managing director of the Japanese American News of San Francisco, was the guest of honor at a banquet held on Friday evening at the Jisaku restaurant in Tsukiji, by 20 persons formerly associated with the newspaper, who are now in Tokyo.

BAZAAR TUESDAY

The annual bazaar for lepers at Kusatsu will be held Tuesday and Wednesday. Miss Cornwall-Legh asks for contributions of cakes, candy, canned goods, old clothing, either Japanese or foreign, and Japanese magazines and books. These things will be sold to the patients of the colony at Kusatsu for a very low price and the proceeds will be used for fuel this winter in the church and primary school for them. Contributions of money are also welcome.

TO NINOOKA

Miss Effie A. Berry and Miss Anna J. Berry of Tokyo spent the week-end in Ninooka.

AT LAKE YAMANAKA

Among those who spent the week-end at Lake Yamanaka were Miss Alberta Sprowles, Miss H. J. Miss Miable Lee, and Miss Elizabeth Kilburn.

IMPERIAL ROOF MOVIES

The motion picture program on the roof garden of the Imperial Hotel this evening will be "One Sunday Afternoon" starring Gary Cooper, Fay Wray, Neil Hamilton, and Frances Fuller and "We're Not Dressing" with Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard, Ethel Merman, and Leon Errol. The program for Tuesday evening will be the same but the order will be reversed so that "One Sunday Afternoon" will come last.

KARUIZAWA PARTY

Mrs. A. Gerdts entertained at a luncheon Friday at her summer cottage in Karuizawa. Guests were Mrs. A. H. Hanson, Dr. Rachel Read, Mrs. W. J. Davies, Mrs. Shimizu, Mrs. John Reifsnider, Mrs. Fremlin, Mrs. Asabuki, Mrs. J. Day Mason, and Mrs. Abegg.

Democrats Held Voting For Bills They Oppose

old American phrase, his eyes are bigger than his stomach. He is attracted by more ideas than he can digest, or the country can digest. The country, indeed, is suffering from an indigestion due to the fact that gulped bites of Fascism disagree with gulped bites of communism, and both disagre with the American conception of government and society.

If we follow the mechanism of government as it now operates, we find that the President, having received the ideas from the intellectuals and radicals (occasionally from some complete conservatives) transmits them to Congress. In some cases, the ideas and the bills in which they are expressed are actually written out by the authors of them and are transmitted to Congress without being read by the President. To Congress the measures go with the President's backing and authorty. That is the only standing the measures have —if they came directly from the intellectuals and radicals, Congress would give no thought to them.

Wishes Followed Without Question

The measures are transmitted to Congress through Democratic leaders in that body. The willingness of the leaders to accept the measures is extraordinary and astonishing. It goes beyond anything that existed even during the great war; at that time Democratic leaders sometimes refused to accept, indeed publicly opposed, measures proposed by President Wilson, even measures generally regarded as desirable in the interest of conducting the war competently. The private disbelief of present Democratic leaders in some of the measures they publicly support is so well known that Washington hardly even gossips about it any more.

From the leaders, the measures are transmitted to the two chambers of Congress. The rank and file of members accept the proposals because the leaders accept them. Just lately there has been some restless protest of members against some of the measures they are asked to enact, and a faint, very faint, disposition of leaders not to accept without question measures proposed by executive branch of the Government. One important Democratic leader has lately told important committees to read carefully all measures coming from members of the Administration.

Party Solidarity One Reason

Now what is the engine, or the fuel, of government as thus carried on? Why do Democratic leaders accept, and why does the Democratic majority in Congress enact, measures which they would reject if they were exercising their private judgments and consciences, measures which are palpably contrary to the principles and traditions of the Democratic party?

There are many reasons. One is the motive of party solidarity. All the Democrats (and Republicans of course) in the House come up for renomination and election next year (except such few as voluntarily retire). In the Senate one-third come up for re-election. In the same election the President will be up for another term. The Democrats want, naturally, to go into the campaign as a united party.

Another reason is the belief that the President still has the country with him, that he is the symbol and spokesman of a majority. This motive will continue so long as popular faith in the President's magic continues. Probably the judgment of the Democrats in Congress on this point is sound. The President is a shrewd politician. He follows a course designed to hold to him the farmers, organized labor, the distressed and the radical, four groups which, if kept intact, may be a majority next year.

Another reason for the deference of the Democratic Congressional majority to the President is the "power of the purse" which Congress itself voted him. He has more than four billion dollars to spend, practically in his own discretion. A Congressman whose district or state wants some of that mony must be in a position to get it.

But the reasons of patronage and money would not alone be enough. The largest rason for willingness of the Democratic majority in Congress to pass bills just because they come from the Administration is the election next year, the belief that the President still commands the faith of a majority of the country.

Soviet To Tighten Its Divorce Laws

Russians In Rush To Seek The Benefits Of Present Statutes Before Change Is Made

Well-founded reports that new and stricter marriage and divorce laws will soon be promulgated in the Soviet Union are causing a bargain-counter rush of discontented husbands and wives to the "Zags"—the marriage, divorce and birth registration bureaus—to get rid of their old mates and get new ones while the getting is good.

Whereas thirty-seven of every 100 marriages in Moscow last year resulted in divorces, the statistics for May showed the percentage had risen to more than 44, says Harold Denny in the New York Times. Although the figures for June are not yet available a casual inspection of the crowded Zags offices would indicate the percentage is still going up.

Aim to Safeguard Children

The project to stiffen the Soviet laws governing the relations of the sexes—which are the most lenient and least formal of those of any advanced society—is part of the recent campaign to safeguard family life both for its own sake and for the sake of a larger and better-reared progeny. Inquiries in legal circles on the nature of the proposed changes are met by statements that the new law is yet to be framed. But that there will be a new law is confirmed.

It does not take long research into Soviet life to see that, although the marriage and divorce laws here have cut through an immense mass of the ancient legal accretions and outworn customs of the Western world, their leniency has been abused by certain elements—and this the Soviet State is determined to end.

Recently a Soviet writer who was participating in the current campaign to discourage irresponsible marriages and divorces spent ten days at the Zags and found people of all ages getting divorces—and often for the flimsiest reasons. Marriages of youths in their teens are common here, because women have the same opportunities to work as men and the State provides many services for mothers.

Yet curiously enough it is not the very young who are most numerous among the divorces. The majority are men and women between 23 and 30 years. According to a writer for the newspaper Izvestia, divorces are most common among petty officials, office workers and the like, who presumably have a bourgeois psychology.

Marriages for Material Reasons

Although the dream of Friedrich Engels, co-worker with Karl Marx, was a society in which no woman would have to give herself except for love, Izvestia's investigation showed that there were frequently marriages for purely materialistic considerations—for instance, because the wife hoped to profit by the husband's superior position or sought to conceal some social error of the past.

There are often Soviet marriages in form only, contracted simply to facilitate one party or the other in getting a room or a part of room in which to live. These marriages naturally, almost invariably end in divorce.

The Izvestia writer noted one such case with pained amusement. A young man entered the Zags asking an immediate divorce.

"But it was only yesterday that you married," responed the Zags clerk. "Such short marriages are forbidden."

"I will explain everpthing, only give me a divorce," exclaimed the distracted bridegroom.

Then he revealed he had met an elderly woman who was willing to rent him a corner of her room, but said that, of course, he would have to go through the formality of marrying her in order to be admitted to residency in the house. After complying, however, he found she was unwilling that the marriage be simply a legal subterfuge, and he was forced to flee.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Phantom General

The Crimean War (1853-1856), which started over Turkey's refusal to bow to Russian interference in the Church of the Nativity of Bethlehem, is chiefly remembered as the worst-managed of all modern wars. The Allies (Turkey, France, England) had no maps of the Crimea, nor did they have any information as to its topography. Even the Russians, in whose territory the Crimea is situated, had no maps to guide them. There was no commissariat arrangement, and in the absence of sanitary precautions, the toll of infectious diseases was frightful.

When the war started, the French Court was greatly given to spiritualistic practices; table rappings, ouija boards and mediums were in great vogue. And so, Napolen I, dead for 32 years, was invoked over the ouija board to give to France the benefit of his experience as a strategist. Both Saint-Arnaud and Ianrobert, French commanders, were constantly harassed by having the dead Emperor's "commands" transmitted to them over the newly-established telegraph wire.

Ohm

George Simon Ohm (1787-1854), German physicist, is the author of the Ohmian laws, according to which, electrical current is directly proportional to electro-motive force and inversely proportional to electrical resistance. In 1881 an International Congress of Electricians established the "ohm" as a practical unit of electrical resistance. Later, the reciprocal of the ohm, was named "mho," being the unit of electrical conductivity.

had called the committe to order, Mr. Ickes arose and asked permission to cross-examine witnesses, of whom many have come up from the Virgin Islands to tell what they know about the Pearson administration.

"The custom of the Senate is not to permit the cross-examination of witnesses," said Mr. Tydings. "This is not a trial. You can of course submit any evidence you have, whether by witnesses or in the form of documents, but we cannot permit you to cross-examine."

Mr. Ickes said that it was his "understanding that the Department would be permitted to question these witnesses."

Wants "Full Investigation"

"All that I desire is a full, fair and impartial investigation and I must respectfully say that up to this time the investigation has not been free and fair," he added.

Mr. Ickes described the charges by Mr. Yates, which are the basis of the opposition complaints against Governor Pearson, as a "wild-conglomeration" of about everything that Mr. Yates could get out of the newspapers.

Mr. Ickes also said that it had cost the Interior Department about $1,500 to get its evidence in form for presentation to the committee, and asked Senator Tydings whether the committee would assume that expense. The committee will consider the suggestion in executive session.

Charles H. Gibson, removed by Secretary Ickes in 1933 as government attorney for the Virgin Islands, was the only witness today. He charged Governor Pearson with a lack of frankness in the conduct of island affairs and alleged "petty persecution."

Einstein Finds Judaism In Peril

Cites Moral Disintegration And Intensified National Egoism Of The Present

Professor Albert Einstein, speaking recently at a United Jewish Appeal dinner in his honor, in New York City said that the "moral disintegration and intensified national egoism" of the times requires all Jews to strengthen their ranks to preserve Jewry. Of foremost importance, he said, was the upbuilding of the settlement in Palestine.

Professor Einstein told the 500 persons attending the dinner in behalf of the drive for $1,250,000 that the Jewish ideal of "social justice, voluntay self-denial and joyful service to one's fellow-human beings as well as to mankind as a whole" should ever be kept in mind, according to the New York Times.

"The basic nature of Judaism automatically imposes upon us as a community two kinds of obligations," he said. "First, we must be alert and prepared for sacrifice on the side of all those aspirations which have a moral goal similar to that described above; secondly, we must keep our community healthy and creative so that it may conserve and increase its value for the achievement of the great goal of humanity.

Urges Relief Support

"In such times as these consideration for the preservation of Jewry comes foremost. Today it is our duty to put all available Jewish forces, if possible exclusively, at the disposal of the current relief activities. Particularly essential is it to provide help for the upbuilding of Palestine, for this work showed itself in this time of persecution as a refuge and as a moral support unparalleled among all other organizations, no matter how meritorious they may be.

"Without Palestine, the horrors of recent years would have been even more terrible and the demoralization of the Jewish people far greater. Today, therefore, we should with particular gratitude remember Theodore Herzl (founder of the Zionist movement) and the prophetic visionary insight with which he foresaw the threatening danger in all its magnitude. He died early, a sacrifice to his superhuman efforts in the battle against misunderstanding and indifference. May our present generation at least prove worthy of him."

Professor Einstein spoke in German and his remarks were translated by Dr. G. A. Lowenstein.

Warns of Nazism's Spread

William Rosenwald, national cochairman of the United Jewish Appeal, warned that the spread of Nazi philosophy to France, Holland, Belgium and Spain was making the thousands of unabsorbed refugees in those countries the focus of anti-Semitic agitation. Morris Rothenberg, also national cochairman, declared that nearly 300,000 Jews will be forced to leave Germany soon "as an alternative to sheer starvation." The most hopeful solution of their plight lies in Palestine, he said, where it is estimated that in the current year 45,000 more refugees will settle.

Other speakers included I. Edwin Goldwasser, who with Michael Schaap and Nathan Straus is directing the Greater New York campaign; Judge Albert Cohen, Abraham Krasne and Meyer Cohen, chairmen of the food and allied trades division, which arranged the dinner. Abraham F. Wechsler presided.

"victim."

Although Cody had threatened to commit suicide, Sparks is not content with that theory of his death. In his prying and investigation, Sparks uncovers a network of intrigue, petty theft and scandal, and runs up against witnesses who furnish ludicrous accounts of their activities because they are trying to conceal their private scandals.

Just as Sparks is about to admit that the case is really suicide, the actual murderer makes a dramatic confession and is shot while trying to escpe.

"Home on the Ranges" with Jackie Coogan and Randolph Scott

Jackie Coogan who has not been seen on the screen in Tokyo for years will be welcomed back by his admirers in "Home on the Ranges," a Paramount picture, which opens at the Nippon Gekijo today.

Jackie Coogan, now a strapping, six foot man, makes his adult debut, and Miss Brent returns, after more than two years, in another of her typical "bad-girl" roles. Randolph Scott, Dean Jagger, Fuzzy Knight and Ann Sheridan are also featured.

"Home on the Range" deals with the efforts of a band of smooth crooks to do Randolph Scott and his brother, Jackie Coogan, out of their ranch and race horses.

With the money from the sale of his cattle stolen, and the mortgage on his ranch in the hands of the ring-leader, Scott seems in a tough spot. But the girl accomplice of the crooks, Evelyn Brent, falls in love with him and turns the table on them.

With her aid Scott recovers the money stolen from him, although their lives are threatened by a forest fire set by the crooks.

In the final dramatic scene, Jackie Coogan rides their prize horse to victory in the big race while Scott and Evelyn celebrate the event by announcing their forthcoming marriage.

Paris Season Ends In Night Spectacle

For the second time the Paris season this year culminated on July 6 in a magnificent spectacle of night racing at Longchamp with the whole track and paddock illuminated and converted into an elegant fairyland. Seven races were run between 9 p.m. and midnight, but the racing was only incidental to other attractions.

A gala dinner in a huge tent erected for the occasion preceded the racing, says the New York Times. Fifteen orchestras at different corners of the enormous course provided dance music in five open-air ballrooms. There were boxing matches in three different rings between the races and at midnight a unique fireworks display. Jugglers, acrobats and dancers kept an enormous crowd amused for hours.

By fixing floodlights on tree trunks, so that the light reflected from the leaves, organizers of the fete contrived to produce a beautiful effect and dawn is likely to come before the last all-night revelers in probably the most unusual public spectacle in the world return homeward across the Bois de Boulogne.

Austria Is Stable, Starhemberg Says

Vice Chancellor Holds There Is 'No Probability Of Upheavals,' But Bars Plebiscite

Prince Ernst Ruediger von Starhemberg, the Austrian Vice Chancellor, gave an interview to the newspaper Az Est in Budapest recently on current political questions in which he declared that "the political situation in Austria can be regarded as absolutely consolidated" and there was "no probability of political upheavals."

"A certain part of the populace is still in opposition to the government," he added, according to the New York Times. "Of these, however, the Nazis no longer possess offensive force because they do not have real leaders, and financial scandals connected with leading members of the party have discouraged the better elements.

"Large subsidies from Germany have corrupted the local Nazi leaders, whose quarrels regarding the distribution of funds have caused great resentment among the rank and file.

"The Socialists and Communists remain passive, although I must confess that part of them continue to be against the government. A small part of the workers is actively working with the underground Marxist organizations; another part has found its way to the government and the Patriotic Front.

Would Reconcile Workers

"The principal task of our regime must be to reconcile the working classes by protecting their social interests.

"The government does not intend to hold a plebiscite at present. I desire to speak quite frankly on this problem. A plebiscite is a matter of propaganda, and propaganda depends upon money. Little Austria cannot spend such amounts as Germany certainly would spend on a plebiscite. In such conditions a plebiscite in Austria would be only a matter of propaganda supported by foreign money.

"Rumors of a forthcoming change in the Presidency of the republic are untrue. I have every reason to believe that President Miklas's term of office will be prolonged. As to an eventual successoor, I know of no negotiations about the matter. I must flatly deny all rumors coupling my name with the Presidency of the Austrian State.

"Concerning Hapsburg restoration, the present Vienna government cherishes the old Austrian traditions and is prepared to abolish the injustice done to the former imperial family by the confiscation of its property and its exile from the fatherland.

"If it could be proved that Austria's future would benefit from monarchical restoration, the government would favor it on the condition that it did not cause political complications with foreign powers.

Sets Conditions for Reich

"Concerning the possibility of improving relations between Austria and Germany, all Austria would greatly welcome such a consummation. But normal friendly relations cannot be resumed until Germany fulfills three conditions:

"1. Germany must recognize without reservation the political independence of Austria for all time [Prince Starhemberg was referring here to the alleged German offer to drop Anschluss propaganda for a limited period of four to ten years].

"2—Germany must guarantee that she will not interfere either directly or indirectly in Austria's internal affairs.

"3—Germany must cease supporting anti-State organizatioons in Austria and must also officially recognize the present Austrian Government as the sole representative of the Austrian people.

"The moment Germany loyally fulfills these three conditions there will be no obstacle to cordial relations."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Volcano Town

Larderello is a town within the community of Pomarance in the province of Pisa, Italy. The town and its 400 inhabitants live off and on a volcano. Its industry, power and light supply are operated by the pent up inner fires of the Mountain. By boring holes into the side of their volcano, these inner fires are tapped by the inhabitants. Part of that power is sold to outlying districts, and the compensation earned in this fashion, is sufficient to defray Larderello's annual budget and to pay for all necessary improvements. Larderello is the center of the borax industry, the mineral being obtained from the famous blowholes in the Mountain.

Romance Without Love

Madeleine de Scudery (1607-1701) began to write books at a time when the so-called pastoral novel was in vogue. She decided to be different. She was going to write about clean, wholesome things, about ways to improve the reader's mind. She wrote 80 novels in which the love theme is completely absent. Instead, there are interminable conversations, filled with advice and instruction. What they lack in romantic interest, they make up in size. The novels are so huge and voluminous that one cannot but sympathize with the contemporary reader. The author lived to a very old age, and is said to have begun writing a new novel at the age of 94.

Soviet Seeks Arctic Route Linking Asia And Europe

A Soviet scientific expedition headed by George Dschikoff, assistant manager of the Russian Northern Sea Route, left Archangle, U. S. S. R., on July 6 to seek an Arctic passage from Asia to Europe.

The expedition, in its search for warm currents making passage through the ice possible, will use the icebreaker Sadko, which was raised last year. It struck submerged roocks and sank in 1916.

The scientists' theory is that warm Atlantic currents may cut through the ice of the little known Arctic regions, thus permitting year-round passage to Asia, according to the New York Times.

The party also will search for mysterious Gillis Land, reported seen only twice since it was discovered more than 300 years ago by an Englishman, Captain Gillis, sailing northeast from Spitsbergen.

Little Entente Faces Breakup On Hapsburgs

Roumania And Yugoslavia Oppose Czechoslovakia For Backing Return

A sharp cleavage has developed in the ranks of the Little Entente over the question of restoration of the Hapsburgs—so much so that the future existence of this organization is seriously threatened, says the Bucharest correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. His story of July 10 follows:

Last week the Austrian Parliament rescinded the law of banishment against Prince Otto, and though this does not necessarily mean he will at once return to the throne, the Austrian act is generally regarded as intended to pave the way for such an eventuality. Today the Federal Diet unanimously passed a bill revoking punishments against the Hapsburgs and restoring their confiscated property.

This policy, which is intended to prevent Austria from falling into the hands of the National Socialists, has been received with complaisance and perhaps acquiescence in some parts, even in Prague, but the move has aroused both Yugoslavia and Roumania. Their spokesmen have frequently declared with great emphasis that return of the Hapsburgs means war.

Carol to Meet Paul

Undoubtedly such an event would attract toward Austria and Hungary part of the populations living in the border states, and for that reason rulers of Roumania and Yugoslavia, King Carol and the Yugoslav Regent, Prince Paul, are meeting tomorrow at Sinaia to work out a definite plan of immediate action.

It is significant that no representative of Czechoslovakia is to be present. Instead of the Little Entente conference that had been planned, this meeting of two members of that alliance is almost directed against the third. It is a solemn warning to France and Czechoslovakia that if they don't unequivocally resist the crowning of Otto, their allies will seek a new course of action. It is thus a serious threat to the Little Entente and to France's system of alliances.

What of Germany?

In spite of intense loyalty to France, to Roumanian Foreign Minister, Nicholas Titulescu, has more than once expressed this attitude especially after the January conference at Stresa. Now with the backing of the two rulers, he will again demand that Paris cease to sacrifice Roumanian and Yugoslav interests in its fight against German expansion.

Germany, of course, is just as much against return of the Hapsburgs as the two Little Entente states, since it would prevent the ultimate absorption of Austria by Germany, to which National Socialists look forward. On the other hand, Germany is friendly with Hungary, with whom Yugoslavia and Roumania are on the worst of terms. There are thus wheels within wheels hindering the obvious realignment of political forces in Central Europe, to which tomorrow's meeting seems to point.

Reich and Russia

Germany's new military strength is making an impression upon the smaller states in this part of the world and its influence in any new settlement of the Austrian problem is likely therefore to be greater rather than less in the future. For this reason, Czechoslovakia has evidently convinced Russia during the recent visit of Foreign Minister Edward Benes that its thesis of the "indivisibility of peace" means it must take an active interest in all problems likely to endanger European peace.

One of these is undoubtedly that of Austrian independence, especially as this country sees its own sovereign independence likely to be affected if Germany's influence on the middle Danube becomes paramount.

Dr. Benes is not only Czechoslovak Foreign Minister, he is also one of the most active figures in the Little Entente. No doubt may be entertained but that closer understanding between that political unit and the Soviets was discussed in Moscow. Soviet-Roumanian understanding has already gone very far, though Yugoslavia, the third member, still hesitates in its attitude toward Russia.

In certain quarters it is felt that Russian influence is being exerted to establish a better understanding between the Little Entente and Italy as a means of clearing what is called the "growing German menace" on the middle and lower Danube.

But whatever be the final outcome of these negotiations, one thing is clear. The new Soviet-Czechoslovak understanding has made "Russia in Europe," especially in central Europe, a factor to be reckoned with, as in pre-1914 days.

Palestine Court Tries Probation Among Juveniles

Though A Novelty, Officer Is Bringing Reforms In Treatment Of Delinquents

Activities of Palestine's probation officer, who is still something of a novelty in Jerusalem, and his volunteer helpers, are bringing reforms in the treatment of young delinquents, says the Christian Science Monitors' correspondent.

Previous to the appointment of the first (and so far only) official probation officer, a juvenile was charged in the same way as an adult, tried in an ordinary court filled with spectators and sentenced usually either to a term of detention at the Government Reformatory in Tulkarm or to a whipping.

Since the institution of the probation officer, every juvenile charged by the police with any offense is first brought to this official, who listens to the boy's own version of the story. A careful study is then made of all the factors in the case, and sometimes it is found possible to settle the matter without taking the offender to court. Some such cases are put on unofficial probation, which has often been found to be quite effective.

If it is agreed the boy should be taken to court a report of the investigations carried out and a suggestion as to the most beneficial method of dealing with the boy is submitted to the magistrate. Juvenile courts are held once a week, all cases being heard in chambers, no one except those directly concerned being present. The procedure is informal.

Whereas formerly a young offender almost inevitably was sentenced to the reformatory or to a caning, he is often bound over now for good behavior, his parent or guardian giving an undertaking on his behalf. Sometimes the offender is put on probation for a fixed period, during which time he visits and is visited by the probation officer. In some instances where parental neglect is obviously the cause of the boy's delinquency, a warning is given the parents, on whom, also, a fine is sometimes imposed.

During 1934, of the 646 boys brought to the notice of the probation officer, 114 were on probation for periods varying from six months to two years. In most cases probation has been found to be successful, friendly relations having been established with the probationers and their families. Help was been afforded in a number of ways, including placing in schools, finding employment, gifts of clothing, etc. In addition to the one government probation officer, there are some 30 volunteers throughout the country.

Speaking of playgrounds and clubs as means of reducing juvenile offenses, K. L. Reynolds, the probation officer in Palestine, said recently: "Playgrounds and clubs are receiving attention, and while it is to be regretted that not very much has been accomplished owing to lack of funds, results obtained through community and private enterprise and effort are very encouraging. Worthy of special mention are the Working Boys' Club in Tel Aviv and the American Guggenheimer Playgrounds in Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Haifa, Safed and Tiberias. Quite invaluable work has been done among the Jews by the trained and experienced workers provided by Miss Henrietta Szold, head of the Social Service Bureau of the National Council of Palestine Jews."

Thirty Student Fliers To Make 620-Km. Hop

Rengo

TOKOROZAWA, July 31—The Tokorozawa Army Air School will conduct a flight between Tokorozawa and Aomori over a four-day period beginning tomorrow.

The flight will be participated in by 30 students of the school who are expected to graduate on August 29. The distance to be covered is estimated at 620 kilometers and the planes to be used are four light bombers and three scouting planes. After completing the flight and receiving their diplomas on August 29, the 30 airmen will be assigned to their respective regiments.

AF Of L Warned On Bar To Negroes

tary of the Joint Committee on National Recovery, divided the A. F. of L. unions into several groups as far as the color bar was concerned. He said that unions that had an outright bar against Negroes were the Sleeping Car Conductors, the Railway Mail Association, Masters, Mates and Pilots Association, the Machinists, Boilermakers, Railway Clerks and Telegraphers.

Excluded By Indirect Means

Exclusion of Negroes by indirect means was carried on, he said, by the blacksmiths, the railway car men, the seamen and rural letter carriers. The unions that organized separate local unions for Negroes were the bookbinders, elevator conductors, hotel and restaurant workers, oil workers, painters, American Federation of Teachers, United Textile Workers and Tobacco Workers.

Mr. Davis suggested that the following program be adopted:

End for all time color bars in union constitutions.

End creation of separate locals for Negroes.

Place A. Phillip Randolph as the Negro representative on the Federation's executive council.

Name a Negro organized for Negro workers.

Begin an educational campaign among black and white workers to the end that both be convinced there could be no strong trade union movement until both races were organized for joint action.

The committee taking the testimony consisted of J. W. Garvey, hod carriers; John Brophy, miners; T. C. Carroll, maintenance of way; J. L. Hanks, barbers, and J. E. Rooney, plasterers.

The committee will report to the federation's executive council.

Socialist Sweden Loves Its Royalty

One of the hardest-working royal families in the world has retreated to Summer palaces, wearied by a strenuous season of festivities and ceremonies, but not without a certain amount of mental satisfaction.

For members of the Swedish royal house, from top to bottom, have had convincing proof that Socialist Sweden has no apparent desire as yet to do away with Kings and Queens, says the New York Times.

At the recent wedding of Princess Ingrid and Crown Prince Frederik the largest street crowds ever to assemble in Stockholm roared their approval of a royal family.

Husky Socialist workmen stood on steplADDERS, climbed trees and struggled for a chance to look at royalty, along with dyed-in-the-wool royalists.

Sweden, with a Socialist ticket in one hand, used the other to wave a handkerchief at a Princess who married a Prince.

Although Moscow will probably refuse to believe it, the wife of a leading Communist editor turned up at a wedding reception at the Stockholm City Hall.

So, it is agreed, the Swedish royal family need have no fear for its future. And what, after all, it is pointed out, can be said about a King who is chummy with his Socialist Prime Minister.

For when Prime Minister Per Albin Hansson, whose wife does her own housework, which might have been responsible for the delay, failed to show up on time for a reception, King Gustaf made solicitous inquiry:

"Now where," the King wanted to know, "is P. A.?"

What it all amounts to is that Socialist Sweden is royalist Sweden at the same time, which might be a political conundrum to some people, but not to the Swedes.

Latest Session Of French Govt. Had Two Crises

Prediction It Would Collapse Proved Wrong; Special Powers Granted

The French parliamentary session which ended on June 19 was remarkable among those of recent times in that it has withstood the fate predicated for it by many whose opinion was far from negligible, that it would collapse under the decay of Parliamentary institutions and obstruction to reform. It witnessed two acute crises and yet made a marvellous recovery.

On the one hand it has equipped the Government with almost dictatorial powers, and on the other it has seen a further stage in the fusion of Socialists and Communists with the complicity of a large section of the bourgeois Socialist-Radicals. Some of these things may be explained by electoral considerations. The appeal to the country will, in the normal course of events, take place next April, according to The Times, London.

The special powers accorded to the Government were labelled "for the safety of the franc and for national reform." The recess will show—probably very soon—the use M. Laval intends to make of them and the extent to which the tasks before the Government are capable of being accomplished, says the article, dated June 30. It was evident from the attitude of M. Laval during the last steps of the session that the loose wording of the authority conferred upon him will be given a very wide interpretation. The internal situation of France, both economic and political, requires authoritative and determined action. In his final declaration M. Laval made an appeal for national support, and there seems every likelihood that he will receive it. Except in a few malcontent quarters the country wants to be firmly governed, and is prepared to judge its rulers by results.

The Financial Problem

A meeting of the Cabinet had been fixed for July 2, and in preparation for it meetings been taking place during the previous week-end for the purpose of framing the financial measures, the decreeing of which is to constitute the Government's first application of their exceptional powers. It was specified that one of the tasks for which they were accorded was the maintenance of the gold value of the franc, and to that extent the policy of the Government is laid down in advance. But if the franc is to be maintained the Budget must be balanced, and as there is little prospect of achieving this on the basis of the present and prospective revenue and expenditure, other shifts will have to be adopted. The burden of internal debt carried by the Budget has already shown itself to be too great for the taxable capacity—or, at least, for the taxpaying willingness—of the country, and compression of expenditure is being carried to the extreme limits consistent with efficiency. But the Government will probably be satisfied if they can maintain the franc till the time when they will be called upon to give an account of their stewardship.

With a return of public confidence is bound up any prospect there may be of a return to better times. Should the Government be able to present their scheme for the reform of the national finances in such a way as to revive the economic situation and give a stimulus to trade, their problem of dissipating the present discontent will doubtless automatically become easier. Exact information on the strength of Fascism in France is difficult to obtain, but the skilfully stimulated apprehension it has provoked affords an excuse for agitation by rival groups of the Front Populaire, who intend this year to turn the National Fete of July 14 into a massive anti-Fascist manifestation. At the same time the agrarian unrest, the backwash of crisis in the corn and wine-growing industries, is only slightly dying down. Yet even a moderate measure of economic recovery would furnish the much-desired antidote to the assaults on the Republic by the extremists of both camps.

Internal Order

Before reading the decree of closure, M. Laval made his promised statement on the policy of the Government towards the maintenance of internal order.

Recent demonstration, the Prime Minister said, had created the impression in some quarters said, had created the impression in some quarters that the institutions of the Republic were being menaced. In similar circumstances in the past new laws had not been found necessary, and the strict application of the existing laws had sufficed. The Government intended to see that these existing laws were respected by all. Only by authority could democracy be upheld.

The Government were responsible for the maintenance of order, and authority rested in their hands alone. They would continue to protect the Republican State against any attack. No individual, no gathering of a section of the citizens, could be allowed to arrogate to itself the exercise of sovereignty. It was the high and noble mission of the Army to assure the safety of the country. The supremacy of the civil power carried with it the duty of protecting the Army against all incitement and propaganda. Political passions must not be allowed to invade the offices of the General Staff, or still less cross the threshold of the barracks.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Ely Culbertson

Though Culbertson has never seen the Detroit Athletic Club, he has played on the Club bridge team and won for them three national championships. One of the members on the team, of which Culbertson was captain, was R. R. Richards, a master player from Detroit, and an enthusiastic member of the Detroit Athletic Club. To please Mr. Richards, and with the permission of the Club, they played together with Culbertson as Captain, under the colors of the Detroit Athletic Club, winning three United States Championship in succession.

Golf Balls Ten Miles From The Tee

In 1932 Larry Green, Ellensburg, Wash. fisherman, found two golf balls on Yakima River bank nestled side by side in the sand just at the water line. Investigation, aided by players' names on the golf balls, developed that they had been driven into the water on a golf course ten miles upstream, where the river forms a hazard on the course. Just how the two balls took exactly the same course and landed on the same spot is the unsolved mystery.

300,000 Veterans At Rally In Reich

Germany's old and new armies met on July 6 at Cassel, for the first time since Adolf Hitler created the new one, in a mass demonstration in which 300,000 former soldiers participated.

The occasion was the fifth biennial meeting of the Kyffhaeuser Bund, Germany's largest organization of former soldiers, similar in many respects to the American Legion.

The veterans' first wish, Colonel Wilhelm Reinhard, their leader, said, was to thank Reichsfuehrer Hitler for his recent decree establishing universal military service, according to the New York Times.

"European peace and happiness depend on the former soldiers," he declared. "We are not thinking about war."

The Kyffhaeuser Bund, which is working with Mr. Hitler in an effort to bring battlefront fighters of all countries together, sent greetings to French and British veterans' organizations. A torchlight procession in which gray-bearded veterans of the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 participated was held tonight.

United States, British and Japanese military attaches were there to witness the demonstrations. The following day the attaches were to get an official glimpse of the fighting weapons Germany has developed since the war, when a two-hour exhibition of "all the latest weapons" will be put on by the army in a field near Cassel.

The weapons shown were to be demonstrated, after a display of modern means of maintaining front-line communications and an exhibition by the Hanover Cavalry School.

Chile's Nitrate And Copper Industries Make Large Gains

Coinciding with bellicose preparations in Europe, Chile's nitrate and copper industries are feeling the effects of increased exports.

Production of copper for January and February almost doubled that for the same period two years ago, says the New York Herald Tribune. Although the Finance Ministry has ceased giving out nitrate-export figures, reliable sources say 911,956 tons of the material were shipped out to the last of March. That is last year, and five times the rate of shipments during the same period some 1,500 tons more than the shipments two years ago, when the depression was felt most acutely in the industry.

Unable to Trace Shipments

Nitrate and copper exporters are careful not to link these shipments with manufacture of armaments. They point out that the United States is a big buyer of Chilean nitrate, and that its chief peace-time use is for fertilizer.

Copper producers also say they are unable to trace shipments of the metal to the final destinations. Frequently a ship leaves the Chilean port with destination unknown, receiving orders on the high sea whether to put into Hamburg, Antwerp, Liverpool, Amsterdam or one of the other European ports. From there, the material may be re-exported to some third country.

Nevertheless, copper and nitrate production is improving, to the relief of the government, with memories of the 300,000 unemployed at the height of the economic crisis here.

Unemployment Problem Eased

President Arturo Alessandri asserts unemployment has been cut to 10,000 men. While the government's gold-washing program was responsible for the greatest absorption of workers, the other two big mineral industries are showing larger pay rolls. Correspondingly, workers occupied in the government's gold-washing program are diminishing.

Official statistics reveal 18,000 men at work in the nitrate industry, nearly 15,000 in the copper mines. Both figures are higher than the monthly average for the last four years, and almost double those for 1932 and 1933.

France, with large synthetic nitrate plants since the World War, is reported trying to substitute copper for some of the Chilean nitrate she has been accepting to thaw out her frozen credits in Chile.

Yugoslavia's 2 Main Problems Still Unsolved and the Yevtitch deputies were returned to Parliament, where they greeted the Prime Minister with cries of "Vodz!" or "Leader!" so infectious in these days are the methods of National Socialism and Fascism. The opposition received 67 seats for its, 1,076,346 votes. The actual distribution of the seats was of secondary importance, and the Government was entitled to recall that the British election of 1931 had yielded an even stranger result. But the methods used against the opposition had made the election a travesty, and the heavy opposition vote in these circumstances was doubly significant. In effect there had been a substantial adverse vote. Croatia had voted solidly for Dr. Matchek, who had found allies even in Serbia and elsewhere. The vital problems of Yugoslavia, concealed from view during five years of the Royal dictatorship, were seen to be unsolved and urgent. If the Government candidates were to be believed, over a million people in Yugoslavia had associated themselves with the murder of the King. To such a pass had an artificial election and the imprudent use of catchwords brought the country.

The opposition manifestos issued at Zagreb on the eve of the Skupshtina meeting sealed the fate of M. Yevtitch. His task had been one of reconciliation. The opposition, declaring a boycott of his Parliament, accused him not only of failing to settle internal problems, paramount among them the Croat problem, but of aggravating this dispute to such a pitch that it seemed insoluble. Graver still was the resolution of the 44 deputies of the Peasant Democratic Coalition (the fusion, effected in 1927, of two parties subsequently proscribed: M. Raditch's Croat Peasant Party and the Serbian Independent Democratic Party of M. Pribitchevitch, now an exile in Paris). This alleged that dozens of Croat villagers had been murdered by State gendarmes, it demanded the dissolution of Parliament and free elections under a new law, and ominously declared that "the further existence of Yugoslavia is only possible on condition that the just demands of the Croat people be satisfied."

An inflammatory speech by M. Manitch, a Yevtitch deputy, repeating the allegation that the opposition was responsible for the King's murder, gave the signal for M. Yevtitch's overthrow. It had for some weeks been inevitable; the moment and the method remained in doubt. General Zhivkovitch, the War Minister, resigned, and with him the Croat Ministers. M. Yevtitch accepted the inevitable. The apparently invincible Yevtitch bloc prepared to go the way of the Yugoslav National Party. Only one of the 303 Yevtitch deputies supported M. Yevtitch's indictment of the new Government. The deputies who had acclaimed him leader a few weeks before settled down, for the most part, to support a new Prime Minister, whoever he might be.

He proved to be M. Stoyadinovitch, a Minister who was Senator by Royal decree, not a deputy of the Yevtitch list. M. Stoyadinovitch, a former leader of the great Servian Radical Party, represented something real in Yugoslav political life and had long been earmarked for this emergency. He inherited none of M. Yevtitch's unpopularity and, by virtue of his political associations, was able to enlist the cooperation of the Slovenes and Bosnian Moslems, in the persons of Dr. Koroshetz and Dr. Spaho, so that his Government, in view of his own connexion with the old Radical Party, stands on a fairly wide basis in Yugoslavia; the old parties, whose resurrection King Alexander so firmly opposed, are taking shape again. To build up the greater reconciliation on this basis should be the greatest hope of M. Stoyadinovitch, but he has a hard and thankless furrow to plough against the myriad jealousies and rivalries of Belgrade, if he is to succeed where M. Yevtitch failed and of political liberties and the solution prepare the way for the restoration of the Croat problem.

Prince Paul

His appointment, however, was preceded by the most important political event of recent times in Yugoslavia—the summons of Dr. Matchek to Belgrade to see the Prince Regent. Prince Paul, his Oxford days long behind him now, has a most complex task to solve in the palace on the hill overlooking Belgrade. His summons to Dr. Matchek gave renewed hope to men of good will in Yugoslavia, who in increasing numbers share the view that, if reason could prevail, the Croat question could be settled at a round-table conference. That Dr. Matchek could be greeted in Belgrade with cries of "Down with dictatorship" shows the trend of public feeling. Prince Paul, the only Karageorgevitch in the Regency Council, has great prestige. He, as the political wiseacres say, could give a decisive turn to events if he threw his weight into the balance. But Prince Paul has been perhaps somewhat precipitately launched from the far background of an intricate and dangerous political situation into its very center. At his suggestion Dr. Matchek went straight from his audience to discuss matters with General Zhivkovitch, War Minister and Commander of the Royal Guard, who, at once the servant and guardian of the dynasty, is the most powerful man in Yugoslavia.

General Zhivkovitch is credibly said once to have expressed the opinion that in any discussion of the Croat problem three things must not be mentioned: the dynasty, the frontiers, and the army. Everything else was capable of adjustment. Dr. Matchek, before leaving Belgrade, stated that the Croats were "unconditionally for the State, the monarchy, and the present dynasty, and for a united Yugoslav front in foreign policy towards the outer world." This suggests a measure of agreement on vital principles so close that the satisfaction of Croat demands should not be impossible.

The Croats have not fogotten—indeed they tend to value more highly now than then—the autonomous Government and Parliament they had under the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. One M. Masaryk, a university professor with dreams of Czech independence, was then wont on visits to Zagrez to speak envivously of the measure of self-rule and independence which Croatia enjoyed in comparison with the Czechs. M. Masaryk in 1935 has for many years stood at the head of an independent State. In Croatia, as the Croats claim, a junior clerk in a Government office may hardly be transferred or dismissed without the approval of Belgrade, and the Croats detest the trick of fate that has put them in this position of dependence after centuries of self-rule. Prince Paul's reception of Dr. Matchek raised hopes higher in Zagreb than they have been for many years. The coming months will show how far these hopes are to be fulfilled.

Green Denounces U.S. Recognition Of Soviet Russia

Labor Leader's Attack Attributed To Prediction By Communist In S.F.

Nippon Dempo-United Press

WASHINGTON, July 31—Mr. William Green today denounced United States action in recognizing Soviet Russia because of a speech made in San Francisco by Samuel Darcy, communist who was recently in Moscow.

Darcy predicted that the forthcoming strike of maritime workers would become an international affair.

Soviet Ambassador Constantine Troyanovsky, presently in San Francisco, said that Darcy was an American citizen and that the Soviets had no connection with him and that the Soviets had never dealt with the West coast communist party.

The State Department is studying to determine whether the speech was in violation of the "non-propaganda" clause in the Soviet American treaty.

Tesla, 79, Promises To Transmit Force

Scientist On Birthday Reveals Scheme To Send Mechanical Energy All Over World

Nikola Tesla, the man with seven hundred basic patents to his credit, who startled the world on a number of occasions in the past by achieving what others had regarded as impossible, including the large-scale generation and distribution of alternating current, on July 10 treated the New York combined metropolitan press to a personally conducted tour of the labyrinthine laboratory of his fertile mind, according to the New York Times.

It was his seventy-ninth birthday anniversary, and, in keeping with his custom of past years, he made the day an occasion for revealing some of the latest products of his brain in the line of discovery, a field in which he rivaled and sometimes surpassed Edison during the golden era of electrical invention, says the article which follows:

He confined himself yesterday to three of his startling adventures in the realm of theoretical and practical science. One of these, he said, "would appear almost preposterous." The second, he said with true candor, "would be considered absolutely impossible by any competent electrical engineer." The third would knock the props out from under the theory of relativity, he said, but in this case also he expressed his doubt that the modern generation of scientists would take his challenge seriously.

Cites Cosmic Ray Proof

He described relativity as "a beggar wrapped in purple whom ignorant people take for a king." In support of his statement he cited a number of experiments he had conducted, he said, as far back as 1896 on the cosmic ray. He has measured cosmic ray volocities from Antarus, he said, which he found to be fifty times greater than the speed of light, thus demolishing, he contended, one of the basic pillars of the structure of relativity, according to which there can be no speed greater than that of light.

Mr. Tesla treated the press, reporters, camera men, news and sound reel representatives, about thirty in number, to a gourment's luncheon in a private dining room at the Hotel New Yorker, where he has been making his home durng the past two years. Mr. Tesla sat at the head of the table and talked while the reporters and cameramen feasted on his bounty. He disdained each and every dish that was brought to him, not even touching his glass of water.

Toward the end of the luncheon he absented himself for awhile and came back with a bottle containing a small quantity of pasteurized milk. This he poured in a silver chafing dish and heated to the proper temperature. Then came the surprise of the day,—a birthday cake with a lone candle, a token of esteem by the management of the New Yorker to its distinguished bachelor guest.

His Greatest Achievement

One of the subjects, which he hoped, he said, will come to be recognized as his "greatest achievement in the field of engineering," was, he said, the perfection by him of "an apparatus by which mechanical energy can be transmitted to any part of the terrestrial globe."

This apparatus, he said will have at least four practical possibilities. It will give the world a new means of unfailing communication; it will provide a new and by far the safest means of unfailing communication, it will provide a new and by far the safest means for guiding ships at sea and into port; it will furnish a certain divining rod for locating ore deposits of any kind under the surface of the earth; and finally, it will furnish scientists with a means for laying bare the physical conditions of the earth, and will enable them to determine all of the earth's physical constants.

He called this discovery "tele-geodynamics," motion of earth-forces at a distance. It is of this, he said, that it would "appear almost preposterous." The apparatus, he added, is "ideally simple," consisting of a stationary part and a cylinder of fine steel "floating" in air. He has found means, he said, of "impressing upon the floating part powerful impulses which react on the stationary part, and through the latter to transmit energy through the earth." To do this he has "found a new amplifier for a known type of energy," and the "purpose is to produce impulses through the earth and then pick them up whenever needed."

The second invention, which, he said, "will be considered absolutely impossible by any competent electrical engineer," was described by him as a new method and apparatus for producing direct current without a commutator, "something that has been considered impossible since the days of Faraday." "Incredible as it seems," he said, "I have found a solution for this old problem."

Cosmic rays, he asserted, he found are produced by the force of "electrostatic repulsion"; they consist of powerfully charged positive particles which come to us from the sun and other suns in the universe. He determined, "after experimentation," he added, that the sun is charged "with an electric potential of approximately 215,000,000,000,000 volts, while the electric charge stored in the sun amounted to approximately 50,000,000,000,000,000,000 electrostatic units."

The theory of relativity he described as "a mass of error and deceptive ideas violently opposed to the teachings of great men of science of the past and even to common sense."

"The theory," he said, "wraps all these errors and fallacies and clothes them in magnificent mathematical garb which fascinates, dazzles and makes people blind to the underlying errors. The theory is like a begger clothed in purple whom ignorant people take for a king. Its exponents are very brilliant men, but they are metaphysicists rather than scientists. Not a single one of the relativity propositions has been proved."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The First Teetotaler

The word teetotaler was created by Richard Turner (1790-1846), a stammering plasterer or fish-hawker of Preston, Lancashire, England. It was at a meeting of the Abstentionists in 1833, that the stammering Turner exclaimed, that "he refuses to approve of moderation-botheration, but that he will have t-t-total abstention or nothing."

On his tombstone, Turner is celebrated as the author of the word "teetotaler as applied to abstinence from all intoxicating liquors."

Social and Personal Notes

EN ROUTE TO JAPAN

Mrs. George Bronson Rea and daughter are en route to Japan to join Mr. Rea, advisor to the Manchoukuo government, who is now at the Imperial Hotel.

MISS NUNO LEAVING

Miss Christine Nuno of St. Luke's International Medical Center, will leave the middle of this month on a trip to America.

AT KARUIZAWA

The American Embassy Secretary Mr. Morris Hughes spent the week-end with the American Military Attache, Major W. Carey Crane in Karuizawa.

AT HAYAMA

Mr. and Mrs. James Young spent the week-end at Hayama.

COCKTAIL PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Gooch of Yokohama entertained at a cocktail party Saturday evening in honor of their son and daughter-in-law who returned to Japan Thursday following about six months in England.

AT SUMMER RESORT

Mr. Charles Biddle of the National City Bank was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Elon Olney at Karuizawa over the week-end.

HOUSE PARTY AT RESORT

An Oxford Group House party will be held at the Karuizawa hotel from August 21 to August 26. Special rates have been arranged with the hotel for the delegates of this event. All those planning are asked to notify Mr. C. P. Holmes at Number 320, Karuizawa, as soon as possible. Summer residents in Karuizawa are cordially invited to attend the sessions of the Oxford group.

SUMMER MEETTNG

Mrs. Arthur Jorgensen of No. 1230 Karuizawa will open her summer home on August 7 for a special meeting of the Japan Branch of the American Association of University Women. The meeting has been arranged so that the members may hear a distinguished visitor to the Orient, Dr. Mary I. Hussey, professor in the department of history of literature and religion at Mount Holyoke College. She is spending the first part of her year of Sabbatical leave in the Orient. In Karuizawa she is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Gurney Binford. Later she will go to China where she will continue her study of Eastern religions.

Dr. Hussey who holds a Ph. D. in Semitic languages, was the annual professor in the American School of Archeology in Jerusalem. At the A.A.U.W. meeting, she will speak on "A Recent Visit To Iraq." All members and friends are invited.

ON INSPECTION

Fleet-Admiral H.I.H. Prince Hiroyasu Fushimi, Chief of the Naval General Staff, accompanied by Commander Kobayashi, arrived at Tateyama Sunday morning from Yokosuka aboard the destroyer Hayate.

After inspecting the air corps at Tateyama. Fleet-Admiral Fushimi returned to Yokosuka on the same distroyer Sunday afternoon.

IS HOUSE GUEST

Mrs. von Behring with her infant daughter has arrived in Karuizawa from Kobe to spend the summer with her mother, Mrs. A. Gerdts at No. 815.

WEEK-END GUESTS

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hutchinson of the American consulate spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. J. Holbrook Chapman at Lake Chuzenji.

ON INSPECTION TRIP

Mr. Keijiro Takemura of Kobayashi Shoten K. K., the manufacturers of Lion Dentifrice, will sail on August 12 from Kobe on board the Nagoya-maru for a tour of inspection in Java and India.

Reaching Java on August 23, Mr. Takemura will visit Surabaya, Samarang and Batavia. By the end of next February, he will have traveled in Singapore, Bangkok, Rangoon, Calcutta, Delhi, Bombay and Colombo. He expects to return to Japan about May.

AT NEW OSAKA

Foreigners at the Hotel New Osaka are:

Mr. Philips Cooley, Miss Y. Fundenberg, Mr. B. Hyarth, Miss Peency, Mr. E. Rockaert, Mrs. and Miss Ross, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Tailor, Mr. W. M. Tailor, Count de Waldema, Mr. Arthur Wiebel, Mrs. N. Girl, 2, Rides Five Miles On Running Board Of Car

Mary Rogers, two years old, was playing in the yard of her father's filling station at Topstone recently, when William Hawkins, chairman of the Board of Finance of Redding, drove in to buy some gasoline. No one saw Mary crawl on the running board of the car, and Mr. Hawkins, his gas tank full, drove off down the road and finally parked at the railroad station at Branchville, five miles away. He then got out and walked away.

Meanwhile, Mary's father, Thomas, noticed that his daughter was not in the yard and searched the house. Finding no trace of her he gathered a party of his friends and they searched the surrounding woods for more than an hour, according to the New York Herald Tribune. When this proved fruitles their thoughts turned to kidnaping, but as Mr. Hawkins had been the only customer to call, and as they knew he would not go in for kidnaping, they decided to follow the car and ask if he had seen the child.

They drove down the road for five miles and were about to pass the railroad station when they saw Mr. Hawkins's car parked there. They stopped, got out, walked around to the far side of the Hawkins car, and there was Mary, still sitting on the running board, sucking her thumb. She was driven the five miles back home, this time while occupying a more secure seat.

Mrs. Buck Likens China To America

Novelist Tells Institute In Virginia Peoples' Emotions And Ideals Are Similar

The gap between the Occident and the Orient was bridged recently at Charlottesville Va., for the Virginia University's Institute of Public Affairs, by Pearl S. Buck, Chinese-born American novelist, who declared that while differing logically they are emotionally similar, and that "of all peoples, Americans and Chinese should best understand each other because we are extraordinarily alike." She ascribed the emotional likes and differences more to geography than race, according to the New York Times.

"The element in us which is unlike," Mrs. Buck said, "exists simply because our forefathers brought with them from small struggling compressed European countries, certain hard religious ideas, and the fearlessness or pioneer life enhanced the force of such ideas. We are now in the transition stage between a new and an old people. The Puritanic of our ideals is giving way, not to lower ideals, but to more humane ones."

The "sense of sin" introduced into China by the missionaries, Mrs. Buck said, illustrates the 'ought in our Western nature," which she explained as "the sense of duty unfilled with which so many struggle."

The Oriental, not so driven, has found peace without this activity, she continued. He is born and reared in tune with his environment, with no afflicting sense of inborn personal unworthiness and inability to cope with ideals conflicting with his natural impulses.

Attracts Large Audience

Mrs. Buck spoke before an audience which deserted almost in a body the other conference rooms where discussions were in progress on the New Deal, the Constitution and the significance of American membership in the International Labor Office. She spoke again tonight at a mass meeting in the amphitheater, attended by the members and guests of the institute and a great crowd from this part of the State.

The difference in the Chinese and Western point of view as to what constitutes honorable behavior was illustrated by Mrs. Buck with anecdotes, and the similarity of temperament between Americans and Chinese by personal experiences.

"I find, for instance, my life in the United States not strange at all," she declared. "The same changefulness, the same tendency to love today and hate tomorrow, the same love of pleasure, the same tendency toward lavish expenditure, the same love of tall stories and extravagant statement, the same disregard for accurate truth, the same huge love of a joke, the same swift emotional life, only here made secret by the American 'ought' and in China, channeled into recognized allowances for human nature."

"Japan is another story," she continued. "The real reason why we do not like Japan as well as China is because the Japanese are emotionally different from ourselves. They are much more like the English, and you will find in England more secret sympathy with Japan than you will with China. They feel the same, they have the same admiration for control and physical bravery and self-denial and national pride and rectitute and detail."

Holds Chinese Law-Abiding

The attitude of the average Chinese and American toward foreign peoples and foreign problems is exactly the same, Mrs. Buck declared, adding that "there is a good deal of cruelty in both peoples, a sort of childlike cruelty mingled at the same time with sudden good humored kindness when it does not interfere with selfish instincts."

It is a Chinese axiom, Mrs. Buck said, that the best government is the one which rules the least obviously. A Chinese is measured, ruled, disciplined and punished, not by an abstract administrator in a distant capital, but by the opinion of his group, administered in the first instance by his family, and, if they fail, by the members of his village. If they approve him he is not condemned, and if they do not they will punish him.

"The result," Miss Buck said, "has been the development in China of an astonishingly adequate system of local self-government, and no people have been more lawabiding."

"Every nation has its own problems and it is difficult in these days to say which country is in the worst quandry and which country most without hope," Mrs. Buck said. "We are a lot of pots and kettles in a disordered kitchen. But the truth is that the causes for conflict and cooperation are not primarily between countries, but between world forces working equally in each country."

P.&O. Steamer's Sale Reminds Of Incident In War

Sinking Of Liner Ballarat Fine Example Of Courage And Discipline

The sale by the P. & O. Company of their branch service steamer Ballarat, 13,000 tons, is a notable event, for in the course of her career, dating from 1921, this vessel has carried nearly 33,000 passengers, says the North China Daily News.

While the name Ballarat, from the important mining city in Victoria, Australia, has appeared in the fleet list of the Company over a long period of years, the most celebrated of the series of ships was the Ballarat, of 11,000 tons, which was built in 1911. After pursuing her peaceful purposes until the outbreak of the Great War as one of the P. & O. Branch Service fleet, she was pressed into the national service as a transport vessel. The story of her honorable end in the English Channel in 1917, when, she was torpedoed by a German submarine, is one which bears recalling. It is given in Mr. F. H. Hook's "Merchant Adventurers, 1914-1918."

The Ballarat was carrying reinforcements for the Australian Imperial Forces. She arrived near the entrance to the English Channel on April 25, under the escort of the destroyer Phoenix. At 2 p.m., although fifty look-out men were stationed on each side of the ship in addition to the official watches, she was struck by a torpedo from an unseen submarine. The explosion, which was terrific, carried away the starboard propeller, bent the port propeller shaft, wrecked the gun supports, and split the 6-inch gun which was mounted on the steering-house. The main steam-pipe of the engines and the wireless aerials were wrecked, and the watertight bulkhead from the tunnel to the engine room was buckled and fractured. The ship filled rapidly, and the main engines were soon under water.

Splendid Examples of Discipline

S.O.S. signals were sent out immedately from the wireless reserve apparatus, and the signal sounded for troops and crew to go to boat stations.

In a few minutes more than twenty boats had been sent away; rafts were put out and troops transferred to these. Destroyers were observed approaching the ship, and these picked up the troops and crew from the boats and rafts. The torpedo boat Lookout then ranged alongside, and more troops were transferred to her.

The ship was deep in the water and none among the troops remaining on board knew in how few minutes she might founder. Then occurred one of those splendid examples of discipline in the face of danger which in all ages have been commended. In reply to the Commander's question as to how many more men the Lookout could take, her Officer Commanding replied, "Thirty." An order was given to the troops fallen in on the promenade deck: "From the right, thirty file—right turn—quick march."

Directly he had spoken, the Commander realized that he had set in motion double the number of men who could be taken; the troops were on the move, but the additional order: "Rear rank—stand fast," brought thirty Australian soldiers to the halt while their comrades passed on to safety. Thus they remained until one of H.M. drifters arrived alongside and completed the work of rescue.

Within Sight of Land

The remainder of the record shows the spirit in which officers and men, having seen to the safety of the troops, tried to save the ship. Chief Officer D. M. Hulton, Chief Engineer J. Cosgrove, Second Officer E. Parker, Carpenter W. Holland, and Bos'n G. Price remained on board with the Commander. With the assistance of six A.B.s sent aboard by the Commander of the destroyer Acasta, hawsers were passed, and the drifter Midgo and another destroyer commenced towing the Ballarat towards the Lizard, the Phoenix all the time steaming round to ward off further attack, the Acasta and the drifter Saurin standing by, and other drifters making fast astern to assist in towing and steering. But all efforts to bring the ship to shallow water were without avail. At half-past four in the morning, when only seven and a half miles off the Lizard Light, she sank in forty-four fathoms of water. The Commander, Captain C. W. Cockman, R.D., D.S.C., and his salvage crew had just previously left her. The entire ship's company of 1,752 souls had been removed without a single casualty. In this way what would have ranked as one of the great disasters of the submarine war was averted by fine seamanship, courage and discipline.

Hawaii Drafts Rules For War Emergency

Major Gen. Hugh A. Drum commander of the Army's Hawaiian Department, announced on July 13 the formation of a service command to coordinate military and civilian activities if Hawaii is blockaded in an emergency.

The announcement was made simultaneously with Washington advices that the army in Hawaii would be increased 40 per cent in the next eight month, says the New York Times. The present army strength is approximately 15,000.

General Drum pointed out, in announcing the formation of the new command, the possibility of the islands being cut off from mainland commercial supplies in a crisis.

The new organization, which becomes effective Aug. 1, will follow the lines laid down by the National Defense Act orginally passed in 1916. Included in the service command will be a district organization for each major island, Oahu, Hawaii, Maui and Kauai, which constitute the Territory's four counties. Each district organization will eventually include representative civilians and available regular army, National Guard and reserve officials, the announcement said.

General Drum emphasized the step was merely one to insure preparedness should an emergency arise rather than last-minute hasty preparations with the inevitable loss of time and effort.

Lieut. Col. James Ulio, senior aide to General Drum, will head the new service command.

Madrid Launches Moral 'Cleanup' Throughout City

Campaign Being Staged Under Auspices Of The Home Secretary, Police Chief

One of the most determined efforts ever made to give the Spanish capital a "moral and social cleanup" is now being staged at Madrid under the auspices of the Home Secretary, Chief of Police, Mayor of Madrid and the newspapar El Debate, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

El Debate is waging a campaign for clean films. Lectures have been given daily for a week in the newspaper's offices denouncing certain types of movies.

The development of gangster activities in Barcelona, Spain's largest metropolis, was traced by one speaker to the glut of movies depicting banditry as an everyday means of livelihood. It can be noted, he added, that the development of racketeering in Barcelona and the rest of Spain has followed the same lines as its depicted development in the metropolises of the United States. It was pointed out that if new methods adopted by American gangsters have been displayed by films, Barcelona gunmen have copied them.

Boycott Proposed

Reasoned appeals have been made by every one of the "Clean Cinema Week" speakers that their hearers should boycott undesirable films and that they should band themselves together in an organization similar to the American League of Decency. If the large attendances at the lectures give any indication of the number of citizens willing to further this decency campaign, then a change should come about in movie programs.

The League of Fathers of Families, a widespread organization in Spain, is supporting the El Debate campaign, and each member will see that his children attend no doubtful films. The Government is being urged to take the hint and sponsor legislation forbidding minors to attend certain screen shows without a written authorization from their parents, as well as to establish a censorship of films on the lines of the British Board of Film Censors.

To give the capital a lead, energetic Mayor Pich y Pon of Barcelona, temporary dictator of Catalonia pending the appointment of a new Governor General, has banned a whole string of nudist films of a type that have been frequently on show in the Catalonian capital during past weeks.

Peiping Decline Continues; City Loses Colleges

Wives Being Pawned By Labor Class; No Law Against Practice Discovered

The decline of Peiping continues apace. The city is losing two well-known educational institutions: the college of the Salt Administration has already closed and at the end of July, the Customs college was to be transferred to Shanghai, to be merged with the two branches already existing there.

The Customs College is a Peiping institution of long standing, as it was established in 1908, when Sir Robert Bredon was acting Inspector General of the Maritime Customs. Its purpose was to give a special training to young Chinese who wished to join the Customs service, according to the North China Daily News. The director of the College was a Chinese, with a foreign member of the Maritime Customs, generally a Commissioner, as co-director. The first foreign director was Mr. C. V. A. Bowra. Up to about 1927 the College had a number of foreign teachers of various nationalities on the staff. But after that year they were gradually all eliminated, being either dismissed or, if their contracts had expired, not being taken on again. In the last few years the teaching has been entirely in the hands of the Chinese.

There were yearly entrance examinations — in the summer — at which some times as many as one hundred and fifty candidates used to compete for a varying but very much smaller number of vacancies. The subjects taught, in addition to Chinese, were English and another language (French, German, Russian or Japanese), Commercial History and Law, and Customs practice. The last was taught by a member of the Customs service specially detailed for the work. The discipline of the College was, on the whole, good, certainly very much better than that of many other educational institutions in Peiping, though in the era when the students ruled the roost (1921—1927) in schools and colleges, even it was not entirely free from political agitation and other breaches of discipline. The College was situated in a large compound with modern buildings in the south-east district, close to the wall.

The College of the Salt Administration was less well-known, as it was a much younger institution, having only been founded in 1920. Out of 750 candidates who presented themselves in that year for the entrance examination 25 were selected to form the first class, and the number increased considerably in subsequent years. The purpose of the College, in imitation of the Cutoms College, was to train young Chinese for the Salt service.

Many Secret Societies

A clash that took place recently near Tamingfu in southern Hopei between soldiers and salt smugglers has revealed the interesting fact that that part of the province is honeycombed with secret societies. It has come out in the course of the subsequent investigations that they assist, if they do not even actually organize, the smuggling of salt and other contraband. These societies have peculiar names such as "Heavenly Gate Society," "Red Spear Society," "Yellow Spear Society", "Long Gown Society", "Yellow Sand Society", and "Golden Birth Society". The first-named is the most powerful with branches in most of the villages of the district, but the field of operations of the different organizations is carefully fixed by secret agreements among themselves. Each society has a definite leader, and also a particular deity of its own which it worships and whose image and altar are set up at its headquarters. These societies are said to be well-armed and to be recruited from ex-soldiers of Shih Yu-san, Liu Kuei-t'ang and similar rabble.

Trouble Makers Disbanded

Chinese newspapers have given considerable publicity to the recent dissolution by the Japanese authorities of the "Association of Young Japanese" in Peiping and Tientsin. They point out that this step will be of considerable assistance to the authorities in maintaining peace and order in these parts, as it will put an end to the activities of the "Five Poisons" of North China. Under this term are designated the following five gentlemen: Generals Shin Yu-san and Li Chi-chen who formerly belonged to Feng Yu-hsiang's Kuominchun; the notorious bandit Lin Kuei-t'ang; the troublesome labor agitator Chaho Ta-chung; and the former Financial Commissioner Hao Chieh. These men having lost the support of their particular Japanese friends will, it is hoped, not be able to make so much trouble in future. Chao who has been constantly stirring up trouble and strikes at the Kailan Mines is now in hiding somewhere in the demilitarized zone, as is also Liu Kuei-t'ang awaiting another opportunity to break loose. Hao Chieh who was Financial Commissioner of Chihli ten years ago under Tsao Kun recently took part in the armored train outbreak at Fengtai. He is now said to have taken shelter in Shin Yu-san's home in the Japanese Concession at Tientsin.

Wives in Pawn

The Peiping police, it is reported, have discovered a new and original system of pawnbroking, the motive for which is ascribed to the prevailing economic depression. Rickshaw coolies and similar gentlemen have started a new method of putting their wives in pawn, in the same way as they had hitherto done with their clothes and other domestic articles at the pawn-shops. By the terms of the contract they are entitled to take repossession of their property—I mean their wives—whenever they repay the loan. The advantage of this particular system is that the mortgager does not have to pay any interest, the lender recouping himself with the free services of the ladies thus pledged. Recently the police have been troubled with a number of complaints from indignant mortagers who are unable to obtain the restitution of their property in accordance with the terms of the contract, although they are quite ready to repay the original loan. It appears that the difficulties have arisen, not with the lenders, but with the ladies themselves who refuse to return to their erstwhile husbands on a variety of pretexts. Above all, they accuse these husbands of their of harboring the design of sending them to Manchoukuo next, and state that, although they are prepared for everything in reason, that is a step to which as patriotic Chinese women they can never agree. As there is no law dealing with this particular form of pawn-broking, the police, according to the Chinese newspapers, are at their wits end how to settle these cases.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Floating Steel Bar

A bar of steel weighing many pounds can be made to float in the air like a feather. A magnet of equal or greater size than the steel bar is used as a base, with fittings protruding upright from the ends placed in such a way that the steel bar will fit between them free to move up and down. Then the steel bar is magnetized and placed above the magnet base, with like poles of the magnets together. The like poles (positive against positive, and negative against negative) have the tendency to repel one another, and the bar will be supported freely in the air due to the repelling effect of the magnets.

Cuba Demands Death For 5 In Kidnapping

The death penalty was asked on July 13 by the State's attorney of the Urgency Court in Havana, Cuba, for five persons accused of kidnapping Don Antonio San Miguel, wealthy 78-year-old president of the Guantanamo and Western Railway during the first part of June.

The five prisoners are Ramon Suarez, Elizardo Salabarria, Gregorio Martin, Jose Diaz and Mario Redo, all of whom pleaded not guilty. The prosecution asked the acquittal of eight others being tried for the same crime.

Mr. San Miguel and four servants were kidnapped the night of June 5 and held for a ransom of $286,000. Frightened by a nation-wide search carried on by the military authorities, the abductors released him and he stated that no ransom had been paid.

Neither Mr. San Miguel nor his servants were able to identify the prisoners as the kidnappers, and the evidence of the State is considered weak and highly circumstantial.

E. African Tribes Prove Amity Will Solve Problems

Economic Ills In Tanganyika Forces More Cooperation; Fatalism Declines

Native tribes in East Africa have forsaken intertribal bitterness and a fatalistic outlook for mutual cooperation, it is disclosed in the latest report of the British Government made to the League of Nations regarding the progress of the Tanganyika Territory.

Through pulling together, the tribes have succeeded in overcoming to a large extent a year of drought and of locust invasion, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

"The tendency to adopt a fatalistic outlook toward adverse natural phenomena gave way to determined perseverance in face of difficulties," the report declares, "and the degree to which economic standards were maintained and in some cases improved under the conditions obtaining reflects great credit upon the staff of the Government, the native authorities and the population of the territory."

The provincial commissioner of the Northern Province reports that previously the natives of the Mbugwe country had made no effort to overcome drought difficulties, but in 1934 they began planting special root crops.

Lending Food

"The Iraqwe of Mbulu are to be congratulated," he adds, "on the magnificent way in which they assisted the Mbugwe by lending and giving them food during this period of stress."

In Tanga Province the natives are reported to have won through with an anti-locust campaign which was "magnificently carried out."

The commissioner of the Central Province also declares that "only self-help and mutual help of the clansmen have saved the situation."

Many of the tribes are shown to have a great interest in the education of their young. The Chagga tribe, described as "prosperous and intelligent," is said to be keenly interested in education, and the ways and means of extending educational facilities are constantly occupying its thought.

Quite a number of tribes in the Lake Province have had a very prosperous year. In some cases this prosperity has caused new problems.

"The young man of Bukoba," writes the provincial commissioner of Lake Province, "has much leisure which he uses for social intercourse and for indulgence in litigation—in the latter of which he is an adept."

More Cash Income

In the Kwimba district one of the most noticeable features of native affairs during 1934 has been the increase in the people's cash incomes. Increased cotton sale left the natives prosperous. Meetings were held in various parts of the district with a view to directing the money into the most beneficial channels of expenditure, such as bicycles, houses, strong clothing, soap, or reserve food supplies.

But such advice availed little. "The native dances were better attended than in previous years and the backs of all young men were covered with multi-colored silk raiment," the report states. The only item on the official list of "beneficial articles" which was at all patronized by the young men was the bicycle. Apparently the bicycle vies with colored shirts for popularity.

The natives, besides giving one another mutual help, are becoming better citizens and rulers. The report of the native courts declares that these courts continue to improve not only "in acumen and expedition but also in the quality of the records."

In the Western Province a legal experiment was carried out. Two areas were amalgamated, and in place of several small courts a court was instituted which travels from place to place. The president is the main chief, who sits with not less than three minor chiefs. There are 17 such magisterial chiefs. The experiment has been declared successful.

Native Justice Improves

Central Province also makes good reports of its justice. The native authorities have wielded judicial powers far more fearlessly than formerly in preservation of law and order, it is said.

Scouting is also increasing among the natives. There are now 129 Scouts among the African population in Tanganyika, and 116 among the immigrant population of Indians.

The territory's trade is now steadily improving. The year 1934 showed an increase of over £500,000 in the volume of trade. Imports increased by nearly £400,000.

The revenue from timber was doubled during the year. Further discoveries of gold were also made in 1934. The output of tin showed a very considerable increase. Coal was discovered near the Lupa gold fields, and is likely to prove of great importance. At present there is no coal production.

A record export of cotton was achieved, despite the almost total failure of many crops; this achievement was caused by the very large increase of production in the Lake Province.

World Television Center Goes Into Effect In Rome

International Agency Will Aid Development Of Industry

An international center for collecting documents and documentary evidence on all matters relating to television has just started operating in Rome according to the Christian Science Monitor correspondent.

This organization, whose headquarters are at the International Institute of the Educational Cinematography, has been placed under the supervision and control of a special committee set up in accordance with the resolutions passed by the Co-ordinating Television Committee at the meeting held at Nice in April last. Thus for the first time television is being dealt with outside research and experimental laboratories and brought before an international organization to be subjected to a wide exchange of natural scientific, technical and practical ideas.

The Center is to give its activities an international aspect, both for propaganda purposes and for the practical development of television. The International Cinema Institute is placing at the Center's disposal a demonstrating laboratory for experimental purposes, which are to be available for all those interested.

The Center is to collect and hold at the disposal of interested organizations the following data: technical documentation (patents, inventions, and applications); experimental documentation (reports of experiments and new ideas in different countries); documentation of practical applications, information obtained through the chief stations operating, how these stations work; documentation regarding public interest, press comments, general views; documentation on the connection between television and distance communications by wire, cable and telephone lines; documentation regarding the use of television for cultural and educational purposes and also in connection with its international functions.

Moreover, the Center will undertake to establish affiliation with the principal groups engaged in television work in the various countries; groups engaged in cinema work and television; television and radio-telephonic groups from the technical point of view; scientific circles interested in television and those interested in the matter from a practical point of view; and such connections as it may be considered desirable to effection in collaboration with the competent organs of the League of Nations, and especially with the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation, with circles and groups interested in television and with such intellectual using it for cultural or educational groups as may be concerned with ends, or for international purposes.

Christian Bodies Hold Parley At Karuizawa

The Rev. R. D. McCoy read a paper tracing the growth of the medical cooperatives in Japan, and Dr. Y. Nozu, director of the Public Health Bureau of the city of Tokyo, discussed the present status of public health education.

The rapid growth of the medical cooperatives movement with its consequent reduction of the cost of medical service, and the immense potentialities of public health education through the public school system, were important aspects of the subject that attracted considerable attention. Throughout the discussion it was evident that missionaries as a whole are profoundly grateful for the contribution made to the cause of Christianity in Japan by the Christian medical institutions now in operation, and that there is considerable opinion in favor of legitimate expansion of this form of service where circumstances justify it, as well as regret that for many years missions in general have paid but slight attention to the needs in this field.

Progress Made

In the business session on Friday morning the various standing committees of the Federation reported progress during the year. Among those reporting were the Rev. Willis Lamott, editor of the Japan Christian Quarterly; Dr. F. D. Gealy, editor of the Christian Year Book, who presented a copy of the 1935 volume, just off the press; Dr. William Axling, representative on the Board of Directors of the School of Japanese Language and Culture; the Rev. H. D. Hannaford, chairman of the committee on the study of social and economic problems; and Mr. R. L. Durgin, chairman of a special committee on youth methods. Mr. Hampei Nagao, president of the Kyo Bun Kwan (Christian Literature Society), presented the annual report of that society.

The most important item of business was the report of the special committee appointed a year ago to study the whole question of the future status of the Federation of Christian Missions. The discussion of this report, presented by the chairman of the committee, Dr. C. W. Iglehart, occupied the time of the session on Saturday afternoon. By the action of the Federation, the incoming executive committee is instructed "to negotiate with the National Christian Council and such other bodies as are involved in the adjustments indicated in the preparation of a program of transference or discontinuance of the remaining activities of the federation". The results of the negotiations to be carried on during the year by the executive committee, acting under these instructions, will be presented to the next annual meeting of the federation for adoption.

Functions And Activities

It is expected that the major share of the present functions and activities of the federation will be taken over by the National Christian Council which is predominantly a Japanese organization representing virtually the whole body of Protestant Christianity in this country. In line with this general policy, a change of name and constitution was tentatively approved in the expectation that this change will be formally adopted at the next annual meeting of the Federation in 1936, if the in-coming executive succeeds in making satisfactory transference of the various functions of the federation. The new name of the organization, approved at the meeting on Saturday and to be finally adopted at the next annual meeting, is the Fellowship of Christian Missonaries.

A reception to the fraternal delegates was given of Friday evening in the auditorium when the members of the Federation welcomed the Rev. J. F. Preston of the Federal Council of Protestant Missions in Korea, the Rev. E. H. Cressy of the National Christian Council of China, and the Rev. Akira Ebisawa of the National Christian Council of Japan.

Brief addresses were made by the fraternal delegates. The devotional addresses at the morning sessions were delivered by the Rev. W. J. M. Gragg of Kwansei Gakuin. Dr. Cragg also had charge of the conference communion service on Saturday evening. The chairman of the federation, Mr. G. S. Phelps, presided at the various sessions of the conference and gave the address at the Sunday morning service in the Union Church. This service brought the annual meeting to a close. EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Dead Snake's Bite

Kullan, famous Hindu snake charmer of Benares, was bitten by the severed head of the deadly Krait snake, 24 hours after the head was severed. The Krait is never used in snake charming exhibitions because it is too dangerous and deadly. The Government of British India paid a premium for each severed head of the Krait brought to it. Kullan was quite famous as a Krait hunter. After he captured his last specimen, he cut its head off, and was inspecting its fangs on the morrow when, for some reason, the head snapped and Kullan died from its posthumous bite. Dried snake's venom will keep indefinitely and retains its virulence for many years.

The Shell's Cross

The cruciform tree stands on the road between Barcy and Varreddes, in the Department of Seine and Marne, France. In 1916, a German shell killed and buried 30 French soldiers here. A fragment of the same shell cut off the top of the tree and balanced it in cruciform shape across the trunk, as if in commemoration of the soldier boys it had struck down. This curious natural memorial was called to the attention of the French authorities, by whose order wreaths were hung on the tree on All Souls' Day. The tree has bloomed every spring since and wreaths are regularly hung on it once a year on the Day of the Dead.

Grandson Of Ex-Kaiser Gets License To Fly Mails

Prince Louis Ferdinand of Hohenzollern, grandson of the former Kaiser, returned to Berlin from aviation school with a pilot's certificate "C2," which means he may fly heavy transport planes.

"I expect to do night flying for the German mail service for a while," he said, according to the New York Times. Asked whether he had been inspired by the example of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh and Clarence Chamberlin, who also once flew mail planes, Ferdinand laughed and said:

"I had not thought of that, but thanks for the compliment of linking me with those illustrious Americans. What I had in mind was somehow to serve my country."

Asked whether he would enter the German flying corps, he said, "Later in the year I will try to qualify as a reserve aviation officer."

French Budget Is Reduced By 10 Billion Francs

Laval Submits 23 Decrees For Drastic Cuts; Expect To Balance Budget

Making good his promise when he accepted office and asked Parliament for power to proceed by decree to save the franc, Premier Pierre Laval, with his Finance Minister, Marcel Regnier, was to submit to the Cabinet and for the signature of President Albert Lebrun twenty-three decrees which are expected to balance the budget.

A total of 5,000,000,000 francs will be saved by a 10 per cent cut in the cost of debt service, of civil administration and of all the spending departments, according to the New York Times.

Another 5,000,000,000 francs will be saved or recovered by the suppression of certain abuses, by reduction of state subsidies, by more economic administration of state railways and the army and by the substitution for the present import quota system of a new and more supple system of tariffs which, it is claimed, will be beneficial to business and revenue.

The article of July 15 continues:

In all, something more than 10,000,000,000 francs, or 23 per cent of the total expenditure of the state, it is said, will be saved or recovered without any increase in taxation.

Details Kept Secret

Details as to how this financial miracle is to be performed are being kept a close secret. Tomorrow the Cabinet will meet twice to discuss them, for Premier Laval and Mr. Regnier have not yet taken their colleagues into their full confidence. In the evening there will be a third Ministerial council under the chairmanship of President Lebrun, who will sign the decrees, which will be published in the official journal Wednesday morning and will have the immediate effect of law.

Of the twenty-three decrees, fifteen will deal, it is stated, with budgetary compression and eight with the cost of living and measures to be taken to restore commercial activity. Contributing to this last much needed improvement of the situation, Minister of Commerce Georges Bonnet has, it is believed, revised the whole quota and tariff system and will inaugurate a much more liberal commercial policy than France has had for many years.

Foreign merchandise, which has been virtually excluded, will receive entry under a new tariff schedule in a manner which is calculated to benefit the merchant and at the same time reduce the cost of living, which has been in many ways maintained at an artificial level by closing the frontiers to foreign merchandise. Reciprocal treatment will be asked.

Business Turnover Down

The magnitude and urgency of the situation, which Mr. Laval and his Ministers have undertaken to remedy, is shown by the fact that during the past three months the business turnover tax has produced 329,000,000 francs below the estimate, showing the pace at which business is decreasing. Figures for April, May and June were actually 178,000,000 francs below those for the same period last year.

If this figure is taken as an indication of the financial prospect for the year, the outlook certainly is gloomy. For last year's budget deficit amounted to 6,418,000,000 francs, plus a deficit of more than 4,000,000,000 francs on operation of State railways. At least a 7,000,000,000-franc deficit on the budget for the current year must be anticipated so that the 10,000,000,000 francs which the Cabinet is seeking to save and recover by the proposed measures will not do more than fill an already widely gaping hole.

Apparently every care has been taken to distribute the necessary sacrifice which must be made justly and proportionately between national bondholders and those who are on the nation's paproll. Apparently any effort to raise money by a new loan has been considered impossible.

Public Debt Mounts Fast

Since 1930 the public debt has been raised from 260,000,000,000 francs to more than 330,000,000,000, or about 25 per cent, and it is recognized the end has come to that easy method so often adopted in the past of making up deficits.

One measure for meeting the situation which is likely to be approved is the transference to the Caisse d'Amortissement of a certain part of the national debt service. A deduction of 400,000,000 francs will be made from the treasury contribution to the national insurance service. There will be a saving of 1,250,000,000 francs in administration costs of the State railways.

Reduction of the interest rate of national bonds is expected to bring about a general reduction in the interest rate, which is a much needed reform in France.

The principle on which Messrs. Laval and Regnier, with their expert advisers, have worked is that it is useless to apply economies to remedy the existing situation unless at the same time a serious effort is made to remedy the economic situation and so cure at the source the evil of a constant decline of revenue.

Spada Of Corsica Dies On Guillotine

Bandit Says He Expects To Go Straight To Heaven

Firm in the conviction that he had been touched by divine grace and was going straight to heaven, Andre Spada, last of the Corsican bandits, went to the guillotine at Bastia on June 21. He liked to be known as the Corsican Robin Hood, but French justice branded him as the vilest sort of criminal.

Spada was in a deep sleep when he was awakened and told that his final plea had been rejected.

"I've never lacked courage," was his calm reply.

Then he asked for new shoes and the fancy shirt he wore at his trial, which he considered suited him particularly well, according to the New York Times. After attending mass and receiving communion he said to his lawyers:

"I gave myself up to human justice because Christ commanded me to. The justice which men render leaves me indifferent, since it is God who ordered me to face it. Soon I will go straight to heaven, for I've been touched by divine grace, and it is not every one who is so favored."

To the end he maintained the courage of which he boasted, refusing the traditional rum and cigarette. When his lawyers said, "Adieu" as he marched to the guillotine he answered cheerfully "Au revoir."

Europe Speeds Up Air Arms Program

Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Russia And Others Build New Types Of Planes

Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Russia and others have speeded up their research on aviation and have expanded aerial programs in their race for aerial supremacy. They are turning out and testing scores of models of advanced planes of all sorts.

Most of these are being kept hidden from public gaze and, the nations hope, from the prying eyes of agents of other countries, says the New York Times.

Great Britain is putting an estimated dozen experimental types through the hardest tests officers can think up.

One of these planes, the new Queen Bee Robot, has no offensive value at present, since it could not be controlled beyond ten miles. For defense, however, it is a big step forward, since it can be used in anti-aircraft gunnery practice, something that has been impossible with planes having any one in them.

Another "mystery ship," the Fairey Fantome, which carries five guns and is said to be the heaviest armed plane in the world, was displayed for experts.

France, like Britain, is frightened over Germany's rapid air growth and is building a great number of new types. The entire present force of 2,167 planes is termed "outmoded" and will be replaced at the rate of one-third annually for the next three years.

Factories are being moved from Paris and other cities to western and southern provinces, where they are further removed from the danger of attack from Eastern Europe.

Germany's plane manufacturing plants are working at top speed on what General Hermann Wilhelm Goering, Minister of Aviation, called "the most modern equipment possessed by any nation" for aviation. The entire nation is being drilled in either air fighting or defense.

Rumania and Yugoslavia have their own "mystery planes," but are keeping them and their expansion programs secret.

Arms equality for Autsria, Hungary and Bulgaria is hanging fire, so these nations are not advertising their air intentions.

Russia has plunged into the development of large multi-motored planes, with three of the Maxim Gorky type already ordered. This plane, which crashed on May 18 with a loss of forty-nine lives, was not military, but it could be quickly converted into a bomber. The Soviet also is experimenting in building a small and very speedy pursuit ship.

Italy's far-reaching experiments have centred upon "the air city," Guidonia. Under the personal orders of Premier Mussolini, this research city is secretly developing new planes for Italy's great expansion program.

The belief prevails in League of Nations circles at Geneva that swifter progress is being made in aviation technique than in either land or sea armaments. All governments seem unable to move fast enough in making their people air conscious either for attack or for defense.

Even little Switzerland has just purchased fifteen American bombing planes as a basis for her new air force. American types are used everywhere in Europe for experiments.

British Heir Becomes 41; No Sign He Will Marry

The Prince of Wales, still seemingly heart whole and fancy free, was 41 years old on June 23. He spent the day at his country house, Fort Belvedere, Sunningdale, Berkshire.

The world in general and the British public in particular wonder whether King George's eldest son and heir, now on the threshold of middle age, will ever forsake his bachelorhood, if only in interests of state.

Certainly there has been not the faintest inkling of any romantic attachment, be it ever so slight, during recent months, according to the New York Times. If any princess, or any commoner, intrigues him, that is his secret.

One of the Prince's most recent public appearances with a woman was when he met Grace Moore, American singer, after her triumph at Covent Garden in London and engaged her in lengthy conversation at a West-End night club.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The True Father Of The American Navy

John Barry of Ballysampson, Ireland, (1739-1803) was a shipmaster in Philadelphia when the Revolution became imminent, and volunteered his ships and services to the continental Congress on October 13,1775, Congress accepted, and from that day until death terminated his services in 1803, he was the senior or ranking officer of his ship and squadron.

As the first captain of the first battleship, named the Lexington, after the first battle of the Revolution (fought at Lexington, April 19,1775), he was the first to carry the American flag to victory on the ocean, when he captured the armed British tender Edward, April 7,1776. By a curious coincidence, he also fought the last battle and fired the last shot of the Revolution. This battle he fought as the Commander of the Alliance with the British frigate "Sybille" in March 1783. Peace was declared April 11,1783. When our present Navy was founded, Barry received Commission No. 1, of the very first record book of the U.S. Navy Department. At the outbreak of the War of 1776, he refused a British offer of 20,000 guineas and the command of a British frigate, if he consented to desert the American cause.

COMFORT AIRATOR

Cool Summer Comfort Without Drafts

If you sit directly in front of an electric fan, you'll feel cooler....but the minute you move, you are warmer than ever. That's an unnatural and dangerous way to try to keep cool. The Comfort Airator KEEPS THE WHOLE ROOM COMFORTABLE. It's really a simple, portable, inexpensive ventilating unit. Set it on a table, desk, mantel or bookcase. Turn on the switch. In a few minutes ALL the the air in the room feels fresher, smells better. For the Comfort Airator cools and ventilates by DIFFUSION instead of by draft. It mixes fresh air from above and below. It diffuses this in the "breathing zone"....replacing the oxygen-robbed, used-up air. It really REVITALIZES the air.

Fresh Spring-Time Air for Winter, Too

When the air gets hot and "stuffy"..... when the room seems chill although the thermometer reads 80....that's when you need a Comfort Airator, too. It draws in the warm, dead air from above and the cool, fresh air from below. Then it adds moisture, raising the humidity of the air. And finally, it diffuses this fresh, moist air.... that smells like the breath of spring....to every part of the room. A Comfort Airator in winter will actually pay for itself...by eliminating many of the coughs and colds that are due to overheated, dry rooms.

Japan's Advance In World Trade Overrated, Says Ito

Japanese Delegate Reminds Trade Congress At Paris Nippon Is Debtor Nation

Ways and means of combating the world's present economic ills, and of stimulating a revival of world trade were discussed by business experts from 40 countries during the Eighth General Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce, which opened at Paris on June 24, says a dispatch to the Scotsman of North Bridge, Edinburgh.

With 117 members, the British delagation, headed by Lord Luke, chairman of the British National Committee, Sir Arthur Balfour, and Sir Alan Anderson, forms the largest delegation.

Anglo-Japanese agreement that Japanese competition in world markets was instrumental in promoting the wealth of all, rather than detrimental to all, provided the chief interest at today's discussions.

Sir Arthur Balfour (Sheffield Chamber of Commerce) and Mr. Yosaburo Ito, the leading Japanese delegate, were at one in supporting this view.

Sir Arthur stressed the fact that competition of the so-called low-standard countries, such as Japan, was nothing new. He cited examples throughout the history of the world, including the tremendous industrial expansion of Germany in the nineteenth century. Despite the prophecy that Germany would secure the bulk of world trade, the fact was that the standard of living in Germany rose, and with increasing wealth Germany became one of the greatest buyers of raw materials.

Tariffs, quotas, and other trade barriers, added Sir Arthur, merely increased costs to the consumers, without conferring benefits on anyone. Not only were they detrimental to all, but they did not eliminate competition on world markets.

Exports Vital To Japan

Mr. Ito reminded the Congress that the development of new countries must not necessarily be considered as constituting a menace to old countries.

"As far as Japan is concerned," he said, "it is vital that she should export goods. She has a population of 70,000,000. She has no natural resources out of which to provide for their existence and to raise their standard of life.

"To provide for their wants, Japan has to import raw materials. The agricultural population has been badly hit by the falling off in silk exports. This alone has hastened the trend towards industrialization and the drive towards textile exports.

"It must also be remembered that Japan is a debtor country. Annually she has to bear heavy charges for foreign loans, governmental, municipal, and private. Moreover, her trade balance is usually unfavorable. All these demands must be paid for by exports."

Japan's advance in world trade was much overrated, Mr. Ito added. Her share of world imports in 1929 was 2.8 per cent., and in 1933 3 per cent; of exports, 2.9 per cent in 1929 and 3.1 per cent in 1933.

Meanwhile, there was a tendency to control the trading relations of the country.

Mr. Ito appealed to the Congress to foster, not hinder, the advance of Japan, the more so that hindrance did not necessarily mean the transfer of a share of trade to other countries. What all countries needed was the opening of new markets by allowing Japan, through increased wealth, to become a great buying country.

U.S. Industry Nets Greatest Gain Since '30

Returning Prosperity Indicated By Federal Reserve Report

"National income" of the United States—held by most economists to be as good a test as any of national recovery—was this spring larger than at any time since 1931, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

The Federal Reserve Board recently reported in its June bulletin that the increase is chiefly traceable to industrial activity, significantly adding:

"Profits of larger industrial concerns during the first quarter of 1935 exceeded those of any other similar period since 1930."

Meantime, as the reverse side of the picture, prices everywhere were on the rise, from the housewife's market basket to the abstractions of wholesale statistics in, say, gold-standard France or Switzerland.

Excess Bank Reserves

To bring the picture home, the Department of Agriculture today announces that while the total supply of food available on the first day of summer is greater than consumption of last year or the year before, the supply of meat is about one fourth smaller. Therefore housewives are urged to turn their menus away from meats toward substitutes —vegetables and cereals—which at this season in any event are likely to appear more abundantly on the well-ordered table.

And in the banks—remaining crucial index of the national economy —excess reserves reached a new high level of some $2,500,000,000. The figure was $475,000,000 in June, 1933. But this is not entirely an encouraging statistic: the money should not be piled up in the banks, but out working through the economic sinews of the country. Although other recovery figures are unmistakable, the bank-reserve accumulation indicates a lag during which prospective borrowers are using their own excess funds.

Production and Prices Rise

The Federal Reserve's comprehensive picture revealed:

Industrial production for the first four months of 1935 7 per cent above a year ago.

Automobile production of 1,950,000 cars in May alone compared with 700,000 in the same month in 1933 and 1932, and high of 2,700,000 in 1929.

Generally rising wholesale prices, greatest in livestock and meats.

Larger volume of production, particularly in durable goods.

Increasing exports, except in agricultural products.

Rising building contracts, attributable to increasing demand for housing and easier mortgage money.

Greatest industrial profits since 1930, except in railroads and other utilities.

Substantial increase in capital issues of corporations for refunding.

popular singer in a theater. All ends happily when the two couples are united according to the wish of their hearts.

"La Crise est Finie" with Albert Prejean and Danielle Darrieux

Albert Prejean, the French singing-actor who made such a success in Tokyo as the hero of "Sous les Toits de Paris," is back again this week at the Imperial Theater and Shochiku cinema houses as the hero of "La Crise est Finie."

It is a story of a revue company stranded when the manager runs away with the receipts. The pianist of the company, Marcel, loves Nichol, an actress. They to go to Paris and perform. But all the theaters refuse them. Finally they find a small playhouse where they can produce their revue called "La Crise est Finie."

Their troubles are, however, not at an end, for Nichol refuses the proposal of an admirer and in retaliation he causes her to be put in prison. But on the opening night of the performance she is released, the revue is popular, and the lovers are married.

"365 Nights in Hollywood" with James Dunn and Alice Faye

A hilarious farce comedy, "365 Nights in Hollywood" with James Dunn and Alice Faye, aFox picture, comes to Hibiya Gekijo today continuing until August 14.

Alice Faye and James Dunn are featured as a young visitor from Peoria with movie aspirations and a picture director who has had fame and fortune but also a lot of bad luck. Mitchell and Durant, star comedy team, appear as two adagio ice-men who pick Alice for a star—and then see to it that she arrives.

Grant Mitchell is the wily head of a phoney movie school, who conspires to "take" a rich youth (James Melton) for a large-sized bankroll. Other members of the cast are John Bradford, Frank Conroy and John Qualen.

Two song numbers are included, both authored by Richard Whiting and Sidney Clare. The song titles are "Yes to You" and "My Future Star." Sammy Lee handled the dances and George Marshall directed the script.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

World's Finest Writing

I have many specimens of fine pen writing—on rice grains, postage stamps, and human hairs—but none even approaches the rice grain writing of James Zaharee, who put, 9,007 letters on a single grain, writing the entire alphabet more than 346 times. Zaharee used only a small magnifying glass in his painstaking work. To a person with excellent eyesight, the letters are visible under the same glass, but are perfectly legible under a high powered microscope. The record rice grain is on exhibition at the "Believe It or Not Odditorium", San Diego, Calif., where Zaharee himself is appearing daily.

The Man Bearing Lily

Victoria Regia, named after Queen Victoria of England, is a gigantic water lily which grows in the streams of South America. It is very remarkable for its floating leaves, which grow to 6 feet or more in diameter. The leaves are circular and have an upturned edge several inches high. The leaves are full of airspaces, which renders them so buoyant, that the average leaf will support from 100-200 pounds in weight. Some will easily suppot a man seated on a chair. Victoria Regia bears a pealike fruit, called watercorn by the Paraguayan Indians who eat it with gusto.

Russian On Trial For Easy Divorces

Man Accused Of Slipping In And Out Of Marriage Too Often Prosecuted

Family life in Soviet Russia is fast becoming daringly respectable. The current campaign to increase the population by discouraging men and women from taking too much advantage of the easy marriage and divorce laws and to check a father's failure to provide for his children is now being reinforced by legal action where moral suason seems insufficient.

A test case is now being made over the career of a man who admits having married and divorced four women since 1926, and who is believed to have married many more, says a recent Moscow despatch to the New York Times. This wholesale husband, Comrade Mirzoeff, an engineer employed in the Commissariat for Agriculture, is being tried at Pyatigorsk, in North Caucasus, under the Soviet Union's seldom invoked bigamy statute.

Last Bride Complained

Reports of the trial reaching Moscow indicate an example will be made of him. An investigation of Mirzoeff's record began when his latest bride, who works in the Pyatigorsk vodka distillery, complained that he had met her in a park one evening, married her the following day and deserted her the next.

The authorities found he had deserted his first wife after six months in 1926 and had then kept winning new wives by "promises and deceits" with such speed that even he did not recall the names of all of his wives. The records in the various places where he has lived are being searched and the returns from many precincts are not yet in.

Such a career is in violent conflict with the present Soviet policy, which is the reverse of the extreme laxity into which many youths plunged in the first flush of the revolution in the belief—which was strongly opposed by Lenin—that any other course was bourgeois.

The cry now is, "Preserve the family!" and this not only means to maintain stable, loving marital relationships and rear children properly but includes in new words the ancient injunction to children, "Honor thy father and mother."

Communist leaders are now emphasizing the thesis that higher purity is attainable in Soviet family life than in capitalistic family life because women here have neither dowries nor need to hunt fortunes but are economically and socially independent. The League of Communist Youth, which is in the forefront of the present campaign against moral laxity, is calling upon today's young people to be that generation which Friedrich Engels pictured under communism—"a generation of men who never in their lives had to buy women with money or social position—a generation of women who never have given themselves to a man for any other motive than love."

Housing Shortage Hurts Aim

Just now the greatest obstacle in Moscow to the pleasant family life that Soviet authorities envisage is the housing difficulty, which is acute despite the Moscow Soviet's vigorous building program. The writer has had an unusual opportunity to see how badly the ordinary Moscow citizens live in his fifteen months of moving from one temporary shelter to another because of his own inability to find an apartment.

In one apartment where he had temporary rooms, two married couples lived in one room adjoining. One of the wives, whose husband grossly ill-treated her, was compelled to remain with him for sheer inability to find another place to sleep. Thus there must be considerably more material improvement before the Soviet family program can have full application.

Luigi Pirandello In N.Y., Jumps to Defense of Italy

Dramatist Sure U.S. Can't Fail To Applaud 'Move To Civilize Ethiopians'

Luigi Pirandello, Italy's famed author and dramatist, winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1934, arrived on July 20 in New York aboard the Italian liner Conte di Savoia on his first visit to the United States in twelve years. The trip was undertaken, he said, partly to visit old friends and partly for business purposes. Signor Pirandello confirmed reports that he would go to Hollywood to assist in the delicate and possibly painful process of transmuting literary ideas into screen entertainment.

Pirandello's arrival was marked by distribution of one of the most unusual prepared statements ever ascribed to a visiting literary celebrity. After a cursory allusion to literature, this document gave itself over to a determined justification of Italy's attitude in her forthcoming African adventure of conquest, aimed at the territory of Ethiopia, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

A score of reporters and photographers boarded the Conti di Savoia at Quarantine to meet Signor Pirandello. Also in the reception squad were Saul C. Colin, his personal representative; Albert C. Bonaschi, representing Mayor F. H. LaGuardia; Brock Pemberton, producer, who introduced the Pirandello plays to America, and John Mascree, president of E. P. Dutton & Co., the author's publisher in this country. It was announced at once that Signor Pirandello spoke no English. This created miid consternation among a group of radio technicians, who had come down to arrange a broadcast from the ship. Pirandello ultimately faced the microphone, however, with the assistance of an interpreter.

Prepared Statement Defends Italy

Aboard the liner there was some delay before the press could meet Pirandello. Romolo Angelone, commercial attache of the Italian Embassy, introduced himself as a friend and fellow traveler of the eminent author and distributed copies of the Pirandello statement. The text of the document follows:

"I am glad to return, after twelve years, to the United States, a country which always interested me for the natural growth of new forms of life.

"I have followed your recent progress in the cultural field, especially in literature, and was happy indeed to be in the company of three distinguished American scientists in the distribution of this year's Nobel prizes.

"I return to your country to see old friends and to renew the impressions of your exciting activity, to which so many people of my own blood are contributing.

Cites Parallel Aims for Progress

Naturally you will be interested to know the spirit with which my country is confronting the present international political problems. With reference to Ethiopia, it is to be observed, first of all, that the Italian people are following their Duce with absolute unanimity, in the determination to solve this problem once for all. For more than fifty years Italy has consistently tried to open to civilization the closed feudal world of the Ethiopian highlands. All peaceful efforts have been nullified by the persistent hostility of Ethiopian chieftains, who are only interested in continuing, by brute force and under terrifying slavery conditions, their domination of the Ethiopian people.

By their bold and tenacious efforts for more than a century, the American people have conquered a whole continent and made it a home for the prolific work of the white race. I am sure they cannot withhold their sympathetic feelings for the Italian people, determined to call to civilization the last African regions where slavery is still openly and shamefully perpetuated. For I cannot forget that your forefathers did not hesitate to engage in a long and bloody civil war, for the abolition of slavery on the American continent, under the leadership of President Lincoln, who had the courage to fight and die for such an essential cause.

"How About U. S. Indians?" His Retort

"Why is this war justified?" asked a bewildered interviewer. "Americans love peace; they don't understand this."

Pirandello sat up with a brave show of animation, repeated something about how America has been civilized at the expense of the Indians, then relaxed again, smiling his inscrutable smile.

A reporter noticed the emblem of the Fascist party in Pirandello's lapel, and asked, "Why are you a Fascist?"

Pirandello listend as the question was translated for him, then replied, "Because I am an Italian."

Signor Angelone and other Italians in the room beamed with transparent pride at hearing such a pat answer Pirandello also smiled, but it was a reserved smile.

Garbo His Favorite Actress

The twenty-five persons who crowded into Pirandello's suite for the interview met a shy, pleasant little man with a carefully trimmed mustache, a small, pointed beard and a highbridged, aristocratic nose. Deep circles under his eyes exactly match the curve of his brows and conspire parenthetical expression. Those eyes, bright and penetrating, remind one that this man was a scholar, a university professor, whose active literary career did not begin until he was fifty years old and is now in full flower, though his years are sixty and eight.

Pirandello did not waste much time on matters of state.

"I know nothing of politics," he said, "and I never mix art and politics."

Pirandello told the press that he would go directly to the Waldorf-Astoria. He planned to stay in New York from ten days to three weeks, he said. Mr. Colin, his representative, said that there was some dickering to be done with motion-picture representatives before Signor Pirandello went to Hollywood. Pirandello remarked that his favorite actresses were Greta Garbo, Norma Shearer and the European star, Marta Abba. He said later that in making pictures he would prefer to work with Hollywood actors rather than with an Italian screen cast.

Has "New Angle" for Films

His play "As You Desire Me" was sold outright to the films and produced some years ago, Signor Pirandello said, but on this trip he intended to take an active part in preparing his stories for the screen. His first work, he said, probably would be a cinema version of his best-known play. "Six Characters in Search of an Author."

"I have a new angle," Pirandello said, according to his translators, "a new use of the superior motion-picture technique. In the play, fiction changes place with reality. The screen can portray illusion and the unreal much better than the stage can."

"Do you consider yourself the Shaw of Italy?" a reporter asked him.

"No," said Pirandello. He didn't seem to consider the matter worthy of extended comment. A moment later he returned an equally emphatic "No" to the converse question of whether he looked upon Shaw as the Pirandello of England.

Sites O'Neill, Lewis and Cather

"How do you write such unusual plays?" Pirandello was asked.

"Oh, they just grow there in my head," he replied. Somewhat later, in answering a specific question as to why he had written the unusual play "Six Characters," Signor Pirandello explained that "the characters insisted on living, and I decided to put them into a play."

He named Eugene O'Neil Sinclair Lewis and Willa Cather as outstanding American writers, but did not discuss his selections in detail.

There was one other matter to be settled. Had the Italian authorities discouraged Pirandello from crossing on the new French liner Normandie? They had not, Pirandello said. His passport was unlimited, and he had changed his booking to the Conte di Savoia simply because he wished to.

Roosevelt Risks Impeachment, Snell Declares

On Borderline In Drive For Questionable Laws, He Says, Assailing Tax Plan

President Roosevelt's headlong course in driving Congress to enactment of legislation of questionable constitutionality comes close to "impeachable grounds," Representative Bertrand H. Snell, New York, Republican leader in the House of Representatives, said on July 20 in a statement raking the Administration for its "latest vagary, the wealth-taxing proposal."

Contending that collapse of the New Deal's "house of cards" could be attributed directly to the President's "fetish" of emphasizing social reform instead of economic recovery, Representative Snell quoted Mr. Roosevelt's own words as evidence of willingness to risk violation of his oath of office to obtain his ends, says the Washington correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune.

The citation used by Mr. Snell was the President's recent letter to Representative Samuel B. Hill, Democrat, of Washington, urging House committee action on the Guffey coal control bill despite any reasonable doubt of its constitutionality.

"When the President wrote that," said Representative Snell, "he certainly was on the borderline of violating his oath of office. In the same letter he urged this action to bring about a Supreme Court decision which would clarify the constitutional limits within which the government must operate. The President was also forgetful of the fact that members of Congress also have an obligation to defend the Constitution."

"With few exceptions, singularly outstanding because they are exceptions," continued Representative Snell, "every major piece of legislation born of Mr. Roosevelt's refusal to abide by American principles of government has either been challenged as to constitutionality or been declared unconstitutional by the courts.

"No Administration in the history of the country has had such a confusing record, and I hazard the guess that none ever will be so inconsiderate of the statutes, the Constitution, and, generally, what the people really want."

Representative Snell first referred to the President's recent comparison of the efforts in an out of Congress to postpone the tax legislation with those of a lawyer with a weak case.

"Mr. Roosevelt," said Representative Snell "should have gone further and practiced what he preaches. No Administration within the knowledge of any man now living has had such a weak case to present to the people.

"Mr. Roosevelt, the lawyer, should know, as most other lawyers know, that the constitutional limits within which the government must operate long have been clearly defined. Already he has been notified by the judiciary that he has far overstepped those limits. No other President has had such a set-back. No other President has had so much reason to urge postponement of a weak case.

House of Cards Tumbling, He Says

The country is awake to the faultiness of his policies and the hardships they have wrought. The country knows that the New Deal Administration is not acting in its welfare It is fully aware that the President is forcing his own legislative vagaries upon a Democratic-controlled Congress in the hope of enhancing his personal political fortunes, regardless of the disastrous effect faulty legislation always has.

"The President should review his failures. For more than two years, with social reform instead of economic recovery his fetish, Mr. Roosevelt has insisted upon Congress enacting un-American legislation. Now his house of cards is tumbling all about him. His policies have been wrecked. The N. R. A., the A. A. A., his keystones, are about gone. Yet, to satisfy his own whims, he would proceed still further along the road to ruin. His latest vagary is the wealth-taxing proposal. It is on his 'must' program of legislation, practically every bit of which has been challenged as to constitutionality. Yet he persists with it.

"Mr. Roosevelt insists that his share-the-wealth program, politically born and bred, be rushed through Congress. It was only a short time ago that the President sought to disavow intention to force Congress to act now. But he has changed his mind. The legislation must be enacted immediately. So far there is not the slightest semblance of a bill before the house. Perfunctory hearings have been held by the Ways and Means Committee, but proponents and opponents were asked to give their views on a wholly nebulous proposal. There is nothing fair about that. It is just the sort of thing the American people resent. The attitude of the Administration in this matter is additional proof that railroading and recklessness in the consideration of important legislation are synonymous with Roosevelt."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

"Memory" Woodfall

William Woodfall (1746-1903), London editor, had such a marvelous memory that he was credited with supernatural powers. He could listen to a speech or parliamentary debate in the evening and commit it verbatim to paper the next morning. He could also repeat, from memory, the contents of a newspaper read the day before.

From 1772 to his death, he was successively editor of a number of London newspapers.

Kamakura, Historic Site, Draws Many Vacationists

wish to fish or hike can get all they want within a short distance around Kamakura.

Enoshima, with picturesque clifts and inlets 4 miles from Kamakura, is a wooded isle connected with the mainland by a sand bar which is dry at low tide. The island of rock formation, rising some 250 feet above the sea, is about 1½ miles in circumference. From Kamakura it is reached by tram car to Katase, where it is a 5 minutes walk to the island.

Shonan Parkway, the seashore district extending over 16 kilometers from Katase to Oiso is ideal for villas and residences because of its climate and scenic attractions. This area will be greatly improved by the boulevard which is under construction by the Kanagawa Prefectural Government. It is to be 44 meters wide, on an average, consisting of a foot path, a roadway, a promenade and three wooded zones.

Social and Personal Notes

HUMANE SOCIETY MEETING

The usual Summer Meeting of the Nippon Jindo Kai (Japan Humane Society) will be held at the Besso of Mrs. Inazo Nitobe, number 1425 Karuizawa, Tuesday, August 20, at 3:30 p.m. Mr. John Struthers, Hon. Treasurer of the Society, will kindly occupy the Chair.

Mr. Kaneko, Secretary, will have unexpected facts to report as the result of his work in the oversight of drinking troughs in Tokyo, and encourageing efforts by way of bird-protection in Karuizawa will be given by Mr. Ryozo Goto, who is much interested that the environs of Asama should be made a Preserve.

The Summer Meetings of the Nippon Jindo Kai are open to those who are interested in the Humane Cause—whether members or non-members of the Society.

AT MAMPEI

Guests at Mampei Hotel, Karuizawa on August 8th and 9th were: Mr. S. Aoki, Mr. E. Tomiyama, Mr. T. Matsumoto, Mr. Y. Yasui Mr. S. Sato and Mr. S. Wong.

K.S.R.A. CONCERT

It is confidently expected that the K.S.R.A. concert next Tuesday, 13th, will not only be one of the most important social events of the season in Karuizawa but also the most successful concert ever held under the auspices of the K.S.R.A. The distinguished professional artists who are kindly giving their services are Madame de Beauharnais Leuchtenberg, who is, with her husband Professor Meguilewski, already a household name in Japan. The two comparative newcomers to Japan who are taking part in this concert are Professor Max Janowski, and M. Fery Lorant M. Janowski has already endeared himself to all Karuizawa residents by his unselfish collaboration more than once with the K.S.R.A., and has won recognition as a pianist of the very highest order. M. Fery Lorant is visiting Karuizawa for the first time. M. Lorant is a Hungarian violinist and composer of international reputation. He has performed in all the principal cities of Europe and America, and has kindly consented to play in the forthcoming concert as he is specially noted or his interpretation of French ciol in music. The other performers are well known in Karuizawa social circles. They are Mme. de la Morandiere of the Maison Franco-japonaise of Tokyo, Mme. Marchand Savieres, and M. Berger Vachon. M. Marchand-Savieres, the Director of the Maison Franco-japonaise in Kyoto has been very active in the organization of the concert. Two of his compositions will be played on Tuesday evening. The full program will be published later.

WEEK-END EXCURSIONS
MEIJI GARDEN RETREAT

With many business houses, legations, and professional offices closed at noon today, hundreds left the city this afternoon for week-ends at Karuizawa, Nojiri, Nikko, Lake Chuzenji, Atami, and other resort centers. The Japanese government railroad, expecting a capacity crowd for this week-end, is running special excursion trains.

Additional thousands will crowd the beaches of near-by Tokyo Sunday. Zushi, Kamakura, and the Yokohama beach authorities have advised restaurant owners and the small shops near the beaches to put in a large supply of food and merchandise for the week-end pleasure seekers.

Many, confined to Tokyo, will seek outings in less crowded centers.

One of the most spacious and diversified breathing places in Tokyo these hot days, is the precincts of Meiji Shrine, both inner and outer gardens. The grounds begin at about Aoyama Yonchome and continue to Shinjuku, so there are plenty of entrances and exits.

The Outer garden differs from the Inner and seems almost like any large park in a western city. In its confines are to be found a very fine Art Gallery, the largest sports' stadium in the East, a library and other useful and beautiful buildings. The wide curving roadways are paved, and sidewalks on either side make motoring or walking an unalloyed pleasure. There are frequent benches where the weary may rest, or where the view be enjoyed by those having a few leisure moments to spare.

Motorcars have been barred from the Inner Gardens, so pedestrians may fully enjoy the peaceful scene. There is no doubt about the Inner Gardens being wholly Japan. At the main entrances are huge torii, the paved streets give way to pebbled roadways, and there are no Western buildings, the few buildings that are located in the Inner Garden being mainly residences of the priests, in pure Japanese style and in harmony with the surroundings. In the center of the compound is the beautiful shrine itself, built to honor the memory of the great and illustrious Emperor Meiji. In the form of a square, made of unpainted wood, it is the mecca for thousands of the devout who daily come to offer homage and to contribute their coins.

The main road leading to the shrine have lanterns on either side which together with numerous picturesque little bridges and artistic benches, lend attractiveness to the landscape. Many shady sylvan paths lure one on to small rivers and streams, whose coolness is most refreshing during the dog days. Some of the narrow paths lead into larger ones bearing signs written in Japanese characters which no doubt say, "No Trespassing" or some such prohibition, but ignorant foreigners are dealt with leniently and are greeted with polite bows and escorted to a mainroad.

Even if one gets "lost" in the maze of inviting paths and by-paths, a half hour's walk in any direction will lead to an exit with the usual taxis waiting to take the bewildered adventurer back to the hustle and bustle of Tokyo.

Borah's Candidacy For Presidency Held Doubtful

Said To Be Republican Only During National Campaigns

Senator Borah is 70 years old, though his physical and mental energies are those of a younger man. He comes from a Far Western State with a thimbleful of electoral votes. He is a Republican only during national campaigns or on election day. It would require all the platforms of all the American political parties for the past hundred years to support his parliamentary record. For these reasons nothing is likely to come of the talk about nominating him for President on the Republican ticket next year, says Mr. Arthur Krock, Washington correspondent of the New York Times. His article follows:

But the talk is so brisk and unabated that, despite the towering obstacles to his nomination, politicians find themselves watching every move he makes and everything he says in the Senate these days. Today he added this interesting contention to the bewilderingly many, and often unrelated, tenets of his political creed—that the United States, not being a "sovereign" in the sense of British jurisprudence, could never entirely deny to its citizens the right to sue.

This provision occurred in the AAA amendments with respect to paid-out processing taxes, and Mr. Borah was speaking upon it. But he left no doubt that when the Senate considers the administration bill forbidding suits to recover on the public gold clause contracts existing when these contracts were abolished, Mr. Borah will oppose it. Later he confirmed this impression. He said that, while he personally disapproved of any suit limitations, he would concede that protective conditions could properly be laid down by the government. But he denied that the people had ever given to the United States "sovereign" power to withdraw the privilege of citizens to sue under certain conditions. Both in law and in morals, said Mr. Borah, that cannot be done, basing his view on a distinction between sovereign as government and a Federal State deriving its powers from the consent of the governed.

Stone Opinion Cited

It will not disturb Mr. Borah, although he has been often shifted positions, to quote this passage from Justice Stone's separate assent to the majority opinion of the Supreme Court in the public gold clause cases: "Concededly they (questions of actual damages hereafter) may be transferred wholly to the realm of speculation by the exercise of the undoubted power of the government to withdraw the privilege of suit upon its gold-clause obligations." Whatever Justice Stone's unspoken attitude on the moral point here involved, he leaves no doubt that he wholly disagrees with Mr. Borah's contention, today that legally this cannot be done because the United States is not that kind of sovereign. Perhaps this clear division represents one more reason why the Senator does not think the Republican party should raid the Supreme Court for Presidential candidates.

Eastern Republicans who have been trying to whip themselves into enthusiasm for Mr. Borah as their 1936 candidate, with the Constitution as the chee-ild to be saved from the implous New Dealers, can overlook this difference between the Senator and Justice Stone. They would rather have Mr. Borah join them against the Gold Clause Suit Bill on moral instead of legal grounds, but the disagreement isn't fatal. A survey of the Senator's record for two years, however (bearing in mind that, to win, the Republican candidate must be acceptable to conservative Republicans and Democrats of the East and Republican urban masses and farmers of the North and West), makes the difficulty which came to light today seem slight indeed by comparison.

Some of His Recent Record

In that period Mr. Borah has called for a National Corporations Act, to regulate more firmly big concerns in interstate commerce; supported a government-controlled central bank; asked that legislation to remonetize silver be made mandatory instead of permissive; endorsed the Johnson act, which bars financial transactions with debtor nations; urged inflationary measures; fought a sales tax; championed the Anti-Trust Laws against the NRA; wanted the Federal Government to pay 60 per cent of the deposits in closed banks; opposed the passage of the Emergency Banking Act of 1933; advocated the repeal of the gold-clause contract in bonds of all descriptions; resisted the passage of AAA; continued to mourn the end of national prohibition; wanted to abolish short selling; fought ardently for recognition of the Soviet; and favored soaking the rich.

These are only the highlights But they make it difficult to see how the Eastern conservatives, the Western farmers and the wet city masses could all be mustered behind his Presidential candidacy even were he 50 years old and resident of a State politically strategic. On the old axiom that "you can't been somebody with nobody," which is generally true. Republican politicians have been looking for a candidate, and there is no doubt that Mr. Borah is a somebody.

Paris Arrests Many At Big Demonstration

terror as police or demonstrators bore down upon them.

Mounted guards trotted their horses back and forth, the crowds surging back to escape the flying hoofs. Other guards mounted the sledwalks to keep the throng moving. Flying wedges of police hurled themselves into the throngs, capturing leaders of the agitation.

Only scattered resistance was offered.

Forced off the Place de l'Opera as motor trucks roared up with fresh forces of Mobile Guards and police, the demonstrators moved into the boluevards, shouting:

"On to the Place de la Concorde!"

Striving to block the march, the mounted guards, twenty abreast and twenty deep, repeatedly cleared the avenues, only to have the demonstrators from into new surges.

The newspaper Matin drew the wrath of the crowd, which shouted "Down with the Matin!" A sharp tussle with the police occurred there, marooning office clerks, sales people and business men in buses.

Chinese Aviators Halted At Border

Two, Returning To N.Y. From Good-Will Tour To Canada, Detained In Vermont

On their way back to Roosevelt Field from a good-will flight to Montreal, two Chinese fliers were detained on July 21 by immigration officials after they landed at the Missisquoi Airport in Swanton, Vt., to clear customs, according to the New York Times. The article continues:

The fliers, Lee Kar and Wallace Chin, were not under arrest. It was officlained by James R. Burke, immigration inspector in charge at Swanton, that they are merely being held in custody until their status in this country was clarified. He said they lacked the proper immigration documents. He added that as a rule no documents were requiredd, but because the fliers are Chinese, he explained, they should have had their status pre-investigated.

Kar and Chin took off from Roosevelt Field Saturday morning with about forty other planes on the fourth annual International Good-Will Cruise to Montreal. Thirty of the planes were reported safely arrived last night at various airports in the metropolitan area, mostly at Roosevelt Field.

The first to arrive was Colonel J. Carroll Cone, assistant director of the United States Bureau of Air Commerce. He, his wife and daughter landed at Roosevelt Field at 2:45 P. M. The other planes were expected to arrive throughout the night.

Kar and Chin, both in their twenties, took off in a Fledgeling biplane, chartered from Safair, Inc., at Roosevelt Field. It was said at the field that it was their first cross-country flight of any distance. While each has about 100 hours of flying time to his credit, neither had taken any cross-country trips of importance before without being accompanied by an experienced pilot.

Reported in Crash at Ottawa

One of the fliers who returned to Roosevelt Field last night reported that Kar and Chin had struck a fence in landing at Ottawa, but without harm to them or their plane. On the homeward trip, however, this flier reported, Albert Mitten, a transport pilot from Mineola, took the controls of the Fledgeling, while Kar took Mitten's seat in another plane.

The two Chinese first went to Roosevelt Field for instructions about two years ago. Little is known about them there, save that Kar worked for an importer and Chin for a restaurant supply house.

Arabian Prince Quits England For Paris Visit

is yet settled on any of these matters since Ibn Saud must be consulted before a final decision is arrived at.

Meanwhile what memories is the young Prince taking with him to his native deserts? He has seen horses racing over the green English turf with countless thousand yelling Britons pressed against the barriers dividing them from the course. How did they look to him compared with the races and jousting to which he is accustomed in his own viceroyalty of Nejd where he and his companions on their fiery stallions take part in mimic battles, in sudden unpremeditated gallops after game, after one another, after nothing but the sheer excitement of speed?

Like his father, Ibn Saud, the Emir is a reticent young man. He keeps his counsel to himself. It would be difficult to say what he thinks of Great Britain, of its factories, its cities, its greenness, its slums, its palaces. He has seen all these during his visit. How do they look to him after the baked sands of Arabia, after the black tents of the nomads, after the far-spread herds browsing on the sparse desert herbage?

Air Conscious

Probably what interested him most, if he were to divulge the truth, was the air display at Hendon on June 30. Airplanes have a great role to play in the great Arabian deserts. So has he. When his time comes to punish raiders and impose peace on the state his father has founded, a few airplanes and motorcars may succeed where the horse and camel of the past failed. So there is good reason for Emir Saud's interest in plane and car. King Ibn Saud today has a few airplanes and quite a number of motorcars. It will be strange if his son does not advise him to get some more when he gets back to Mecca.

What sort of a man is this young prince? Tall and lithe, very much like what his father was when he was younger. The father is a giant even by western standards and towers a foot and more over the majority of his fellow-countrymen. His feats of strength are proverbial and the source of much of his power in a land where endurance and hardship are a necessity of everyday existence.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Oldest Witness

Thomas Goriot-Gangheen, born in 1702, was a surveyor of Lincolnshire for about 60 years. In 1810, when he was 108 years old and retired, he was summoned as a witness in a litigation over a survey he had made in 1725, 85 years previously. Both parties were very dubious about the probative value of a centenarian's memory. But Gangheen testified for 2½ hours, and his testimony, as vigorous and intelligent as that of a witness 50 years younger, decided the case, upholding the survey of four score five years before. Gangheen died 4 years later, aged 112, in 1814.

Britain Said To Have Alloted Ethiopia To Italy

grees East Longitude, identifies itself in a southerly direction with that meridian until it meets the Blue Nile, saving the ulterior amendment of details according to hydrographic and orographic conditions of the country."

The line above described is roughly the present frontier of Eritrea and Ethiopia with Anglo-Egyptian Sudan to the thirty-fifth meridian. From there on one need only look at the thirty-fifth meridian and sixth parallel to see how little of Ethiopia is excluded from Italy's sphere.

Article 2 allows Italy, "in case of her being obliged to do so by the necessities of the military situation," to occupy Kassala and the adjoining country as far as the Apdara while safeguarding Egypt's permanent sovereignty over it. These provisions seem of little importance now.

Article 3 reads:

"The Italian Government engages not to construct on the Apdara, in view of irrigation, any work which might sensibly modify its flow into the Nile."

Article 4 allows Italy free passage between Metemma and Kassala.

It will be seen that Britain handed over to Italy Lake Tsana and the Blue Nile's headwaters in these protocols. Yet on May 15, 1902, Britain made a bilateral treaty with Ethiopia in which she gained this right in Article 3, as follows:

"His Majesty, Emperor Menelik II, King of Kings of Ethiopia, engages himself toward the government of His Britannic Majesty, not to construct or allow to be constructed any works across the Blue Nile, Lake Tsana or the Sobat which would arrest the flow of their waters into the Nile except in agreement with His Britannic Majesty's Government and the government of Sudan."

On the basis of this 1902 treaty, Britain has so far successfully prevented the J. V. White Corporation of New York from constructing the dam at Lake Tsana, for which Ethiopia gave the corporation a contract in November, 1927.

Britain got this infringement on Italy's sphere recognized by Italy in the treaty of Dec. 13, 1906, signed in London by Lord Grey for Great Britain, Pierre Paul Cambon for France and the Marquis of San Giuliano for Italy, for the maintenance of the status quo in and the integrity of Ethiopia, for non-intervention in Ethiopian internal affairs and for consultation among the three signatories.

Article 1 of this treaty makes it clear that, far from annuling the 1891 protocols, it is based on them. It reads:

"France, Great Britain and Italy shall cooperate in maintaining the political and territorial status quo in Ethiopia, as determined by the state of affairs existing and by the following agreements:

"A—The Anglo-Italian protocols of the 24th of March and 15th of April, 1891, and the 5th of May, 1894, and subsequent agreements modifying them, including the reserves formulated by the French Government in 1894 and 1895."

There follows a list of a dozen or more other treaties governing frontiers, of which only one, the 1902 treaty just cited, concerns spheres of influence.

Nor does the 1894 treaty affect the 1891 spheres.

The French reserves of 1894 and 1895 are not known here, but presumably they were made to protect the French railway from Djibouti to Addis Ababa when Paris learned of the secret protocols.

Article 1 of the 1906 agreement concluded:

"It is understood that the various conventions mentioned in this article do not in any way infringe on the sovereign rights of the Emperor of Ethiopia and in no respect modify the relations between the three powers and the Ethiopian Empire as stipulated in the present agreement.

Protocols Are Reaffirmed

The last article, No. 11, further reaffirms the legal value of the 1891 protocols, for it reads:

"Beyond the agreements enumerated in Articles 1 and 5 (the latter deals with the French railway) of the present convention, no agreement concluded by any one of the contracting powers concerning Ethiopia shall affect the other signatory powers of the present agreement."

Article 4, which also is important as regards the protocols, reads:

"In the event of the status quo laid down in Article 1 being disturbed, France, Great Britain and Italy shall make every effort to preserve the integrity of Ethiopia. In any case, they shall concert together on the basis of the agreements enumerated in the above-mentioned article in order to safeguard.

"A—The interests of Great Britan and Egypt in the Nile Basin, more especially as regards regulation of the waters of that river and its tributaries (due consideration being paid to local interests) without prejudice to the Italian interests mentioned:

"B—The interests of Italy in Ethiopia as regards Eritrea and Somaliland (including Bennadir), more especially with reference to the hinterland, her possessions and the territorial connection between them to the west of Addis Ababa;

"C.—The interest of France in Ethiopia as regards her protectorate on the Somali coast, the hinterland of this protectorate and the zone necessary for the construction and working of the railway from Djibouti to Addis Ababa."

It is significant that references to Italy in this article are vaguely defined, until one traces them back to the protocols. It is also significant that they do not conflict with them, except as regards the Nile and the French railway zones.

Britain Got Italy as an Ally

What had happened was that Britain had brought Italy into East Africa as an informal ally to split the Dervsh strength and to enable Britain to take Sudan before the French could.

Britain was paying for this in 1891, only a few years after Gladstone had pledged that Britain's occupation of Egypt was provisional. This explains the apparent failure to reserve the Blue Nile in the protocols.

By 1902 Britain had settled down in Egypt and Sudan, and Italy had suffered defeat at Adowa.

In 1904 the British and French began their Entente Cordials, and the treaty of 1906 was made by these new friends to nibble off the Blue Nile and the French railway zone from the sphere of Italy, who belonged to the Triple Alliance. It took a year for them to persuade Italy to weaken, although she then was to accept the 1906 treaty.

One more thing was nibbled off her 1891 rights by this treaty, for in its ninth article the British reserved the right to extend the French railway west of Addis Ababa to Sudan and also to build another railway from British Somaliland to Sudan.

Immediately after the World War in 1919, Italy formally sought to reassure herself of the British execution of these Ethiopian partitions. No answer came.

Meanwhile the British press in 1923 began to talk of a British mandate for "slave-ridden Ethiopia." To prevent this, France and Italy pushed Ethiopia into the League in 1923, according to a high League official who participated in these negotiations.

Then on Dec. 14, 1925, Britain answered the 1919 bid of Rome by agreeing to support Italy in Ethiopia in return for Italy's helping her to get a concession to build a dam at Lake Tsana. France checked that.

Then, last January, France renounced to Italy her economic rights in Ethiopia. Premier Mussolini began sending troops to East Africa, and a conflict started behind the scenes among Britain's 1891 obligations to Italy and her colonial interests, the League covenant and the peace-pact obligations of all the powers.

The text of the 1891 protocols and the 1906 treaty were published in 1909 as "A Map of Africa by Treaty," done for His Majesty's Stationery Office by officials of the British Foreign Office. But the protocols seem to have escaped public attention then and to have been covered with dust on public library shelves ever since. They are in Volume 3 and foreign number 288 and 289 of "Treaties Published," this latter work being accompanied by the map. The texts quoted in this dispatch are from this source.

Negro Is Lynched By Mob In Florida

Masked Men Take Alleged Knifer Of White Woman From Deputies

A Negro accused of a knife attack on a white woman was snatched from six deputies near Fort Lauderdale, Florida on July 19 and lynched by a mob of masked white men, reports a New York paper.

The suspect, booked as Rubin Stacy, was hanged to a roadside tree within sight of the home of Mrs. Marion Jones, 30 years old, the mother of three children, who had identified him as her assailant.

Arrested amid gunfire, Stacy was being taken by Broward County officers to the Dade County jail in Miami, twenty-five miles from here, for safekeeping until he could be brought to trial.

"There were about 100 of them," said Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright, "and they ran our car off the road.

"After overpowering us, the masked men took the Negro up the road and hanged him. He was filled full of bullets, too. I guess they shot him both before and after they hanged him."

When Stacy was brought before her this morning by the officers for identification, Mrs. Jones cried out:

"That is the man, without a doubt."

Deputy Wright said that the officers were unable to identify any of the masked men. The license plates of their automobiles were covered with paper or cloth, or had been removed.

An hour after the lynching, the body of the Negro was stilll swinging from a limb. Deputy Wright said that it remained there until Peace Justice Hugh Lester could reach the scene and give his consent to its removal.

"As far as we can figure out," Wright said, "they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Admitted to her home on the pretext that he wanted a glass of water, Mrs. Jones's assailant suddenly sized her by the throat and flourished a small knife.

"He kept saying 'Don't holler, don't holler, but I didn't do anything else," she told deputies when they reached the house.

"I fought him as hard as I could, cutting my hands on his knife as I struck at it. I ran through the back door and he followed me, succeeding in throwing me to the ground while I continued to fight him.

"It seemed to me from the look in his eyes that he was intent on cutting my throat."

Her frantic cries for help finally frightened her assailant away.

Stacey was sought when Sheriff Walter Clark learned that he had disappeared from his house, a mile and a half from the Jones home, on the day of the attack.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Street Called Straight

The "Street Called Straight" in Damascus, mentioned in Acts 9, 11, contained the residence of Judas, where dwelt the Apostle Paul, when he was converted. The Street is still in existence and is about 1½ miles long, running through the center of the city. It has been roofed over so that it looks, from above, like a pipeline laid through Damascus. The Street, which still bears the same name as in the days of St. Paul, is the scene of an animated commercial life today. It is lined with barber shops, eating stalls and cagelike artisans' shelters.

Social and Personal Notes

The women's doubles, which was won 6—4, 6—3, was postponed from Saturday because of the rain. Mr. Oeburn and Dr. Martin presented the Japan Times cups and Mrs. Mikimoto gave awards to the runners-up.

The junior tennis tournament was to begin today under the management of Mr. Donald Zoll and Mr. Miller.

Mrs. Teaze returned to her home in Nojiri immediately following the matches Monday. She had been the guest in Karuizawa of Mrs. S. V. Davies and Mrs. Robert Wolfe.

British Naval Stand Assailed By Pittman

Great Britain's abandonment of naval ratios produced a statement on July 22 by Chairman Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that "it constitutes an abandonment of the Washington treaty" and is "just another move toward construing treaties only as scraps of paper."

Chairman Trammell of the Senate Naval Committee, however, expressed belief that the British did not intend for this open season in naval building to take effect until 1937.

"It appears that the new policy will not be made effective until after the present agreement expires next year," he said.

Beyond the statement that "it's interesting, but not surprising," Senator Borah, former chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee and now ranking minority member, declined to comment.

Nationalization Of British Arms Output Proposed

Three Possible Methods Of Control Submitted To Royal Commission

Three possible ways of controlling arms merchants were outlined by the Union of Democratic Control at the reopening of the hearing before the Royal Commission on Private Manufacture of and Trading in Arms at London recently.

The union itself, Sir William Jowitt, its spokesman, told the Commission, believed that if the British Government wishes to have the arms industry "free from inefficiency and abuses inherent in private manufacture," they could have it by taking it over, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

They could nationalize the arms industry, including heavy arms, chemicals and explosives and aircraft. Such nationalization would have to be supplemented by control of sources of raw materials, such as iron and nickel. Or they could nationalize the armaments sections of their respective industries. The technical problem of separation of production and process from normal industrial work was possible, he held.

If, on the other hand, the Commission felt that industry should still be left in private hands, the Government's control, he held, could be intensified by several means. The present licensing system whereby export of arms from Britain is controlled could be stiffened. There might also be financial inspection and control, separation of financial arrangements for war and civil research with full publicity.

The Government's supervision of arms traders could be still further strengthened, Sir William contended, by inspection and control internally by democratically elected workers in firms concerned and by international inspection and control.

In this connection, Dame Rachel Crowdy, the only woman member of the Commission and former chief of the League's social and anti-opium sections, drew attention to American proposals for curbing the arms trade recently discussed by a Senate subcommittee. The union spokesman urged that the Royal Commission beg the British Government to give the United States proposals all their support when they are next considered at Geneva.

At the conclusion of the session, the Commission decided it would not sit again for some considerable time.

Italy's War Costs Cut Gold Reserve

Rome Decrees Suspension Of 40 Per Cent Coverage To Meet Urgent Situation

The Italian Government has decided temporarily to suspend the requirement of 40 per cent gold coverage of the note issue, fixed Dec. 21, 1927, under the decree stabilizing the lira at 92.76 to the pound sterling.

This decision was announced in Rome on July 22 in the official gazette under a royal decree dated July 21 which says that in consideration of the necessity and urgency of procuring means of making foreign payments of exceptional character, the observance of the first paragraph of Article IV of the royal decree of Dec. 21, 1927, is temporarily suspended, says the New York Times.

Commenting on the above decree, a financial expert pointed out this evening that the "outflow of gold, which previously has been arrested by various measures obliging Italian holders of foreign exchange to hand over their holdings to the Bank of Italy, again became manifest in the bank's return of June 20. At this date gold holdings of the Bank of Italy were 5,677,000,000 lire, against 5,829,000,000 lire on June 10."

Loss Technically Made Good

"This loss of gold was technically made good by a corresponding increase of foreign exchange holdings, which rose from 54,000,000 to 207,000,000 lire," he said. "The same kind of substitution of gold by foreign exchange was in a lesser degree visible in two subsequent bank returns.

"Obviously the Bank of Italy has been meeting demands to cover Italian import requirements by selling gold and has replaced the gold by buying up the credits abroad of Italian exporters, thereby maintaining the total of cover. Further possibilities on these lines are, however, limited, and the government therefore decided to ease the situation of the bank by lowering the proportion of gold cover to its total liabilities."

The decision of the government is entirely contrary to the official policy of maintaining the high nominal value of the lira which has been pursued during the last few years ever since Premier Mussolini's famous speech when he said Italy would defend the lira and maintain its value, if necessary, with blood.

Situation Held Serious

It is considered here that the new decree, combined with recent warlike utterances given by Premier Mussolini in French newspapers, implies that the situation is extremely serious and that Italy is determined to go to the end whatever the cost may be to the country. For some time Italy has been only nominally on gold inasmuch as exports of Italian currency have been strictly controlled on the German model.

In the past four years the Italian budget has amounted to some $1,200,000,000 at current rates. It is estimated the deficit for the year 1935-6 is about $170,000,000, but the cost of military preparations in connection with the Ethiopian dispute is expected to swell this considerably.

Problem

She was bidding her lover a fond farewell, for he was going on a business trip around the world.

Tearfully she clung to him and said: "My darling, promise that you will write to me from every town you visit!"

And as he gathered her in his arms he cried :"Oh, Ada, is it love that prompts you to say this? Do you really love me, or are you merely collecting foreign postage stamps?" —Tit-Bits.

Greeks Boycotting Ships Bearing Arms To Africa

Marine unions in Piraeus have engaged in a labor boycott against vessels carrying arms to Italian East Africa with the intention of bringing out on strike all Greek crews of arms-bearing ships. Already eleven men from the freighter John Nomikos have returned to Athens after quitting the ship in Alexandria, Egypt, because there were munitions in the cargo, according to the New York Times. The ship's owners have been unable to find another crew because of the union's agitation.

Difficulty also is being experienced in finding crews to sail to Italy. The Byron and the Edison, liners formerly in New York service, were sold last week to Italy for war supply services.

Premier Lyons Of Australia Pays Visit To America

To Confer With Leaders There And In Canada; Is His First Visit

Joseph Aloysius Lyons, Prime Minister of Australia, arrived recently aboard the Italian liner Rex for his first visit to the United States. He was on his way home from England, where he represented his commonwealth at the ceremonies attendant upon the Silver Jubilee of King George V's accession to the throne, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

Even a few moments of conversation with Joseph Aloysius Lyons revealed much of the talent and personality that have taken him far and fast in the last three years. In the first place he is a man utterly without swank or pretension. In Australia he is called Joe Lyons, and prefers so to be called here. But he is emphatically not the hooey, or Louisiana, type of plain man. He holds himself with a reserved dignity that allows no suspicion of assumed simplicity, the dignity of a man who has done much, has much to do and has entire confidence in his own ability to do it, says the Tribune article which continues:

In appearance Mr. Lyons is of average height and size. He is in his fifty-sixth year, slightly rotund, but he carries himself well in spite of a slight limp, the result of a railroad accident years ago. His head is well shaped, his features delicate and firm. His brows are straight over deep-set eyes, and his mouth is straight and small. He has an unruly shock of steel-gray hair and a truly notable nose, thin, high-bridged and intellectual.

In his press conference Mr. Lyons's mental guard was up, his face was serious and intent. But later, when the Prime Minister and his wife walked to a sunlit upper deck and posed for the camera corps, Mr. Lyons relaxed and smiled, and a dozen little lines crinkled at each temple and told their story of a man who laughs well and often.

"How shall I pose?" he asked. "Oh yes, leaning against something, just like a politician."

Like a good politician, he kept a tight rein and set the pace of his own interview, finding an answer for every question, but steering a safe course in the calm waters of generalization.

"I think we felt the depression first," Mr. Lyons said, "perhaps before any other large country. We are a primary producing country, you know. We produce and export raw materials. Practically speaking, we don't export secondary, or manufactured articles at all. Farm industry has been hard hit the world over. We got our share and more. Between 1929 and 1932 the national income dropped from £650,000,000 to £450,000,000. We faced huge deficits, one year of £25,000,000. It may not sound so much to you, with your great population, but it was a crisis for us."

That was the point where Joe Lyons "took things in hand," to use his own phrase, and made a vitally important decision. That was one of the matters he did not discuss very fully, but the facts already are well known. Mr. Lyons, from the time he gave up teaching school to enter practical politics, had been identified with Australia's Federal Labor party.

When debt and depression brought on Australia's critical moment he was a minor member of a Labor Cabinet. Members of his party began to swing toward the expedient of a wild inflationary program, and Joe Lyons stepped out and up.

"Their plans were such that I could not remain," he said. Mr. Lyons rallied the conservative elements into an United Australia party and placed himself at the head of it, much as England's Ramsay MacDonald took control of a National Cabinet. Instead of spending his way out of trouble, Mr. Lyons set himself to save his way out.

"We reduced salaries and pensions and made every possible economy," he said. "We converted our national debt internally, and reduced it 22.5 per cent. That was a voluntary step taken by the people of Australia. We managed to restore confidence. We have had no deficit in the national exchequer since 1932. Our last budget, which has just ended, showed a surplus of 700,000 pounds—about $3,000,000 in our devalued pound.

Employment on Increase

"I am glad to say that we have now been able to restore, in a large part, public servants salaries, and we have cut taxes. We still have unemployment, but it has been going down since 1932. We have wiped out more than 50 per cent of the unemployment caused by the depression."

Australia has conducted a program of public works, he said, but this has been a minor feature of her "hard-headed" recovery program. Most of the re-employment has been furnished by private enterprise, he said.

The giant bridge over Sydney Harbor was not a public works project, he said, but the building program at Canberra, the national capital, has been resumed after a lapse of several years. The rare aborigines of the great continent "down under" seem to be disappearing, he said, regretfully.

Throughout his interview, Mr. Lyons held in his hand a letter, marked with "The White House" and addressed to His Excellency, the Prime Minister of Australia. It was typical of Joe Lyons that "His Excellency" suggested that his visitors of the official welcoming delegation call him Mr. Lyons. In that party were Clark L. Willard, of the State Department; J. Pierrepont Moffat, newly appointed consul general at Sydney; E. H. G. Shepherd, acting British consul general at New York, and D. M. Dow, Australian secretary here.

Mrs. Lyons, a plump, handsome, young-looking woman, told reporters she looked forward to meeting Mrs. Roosevelt. And both she and Australia's Prime Minister will be more than glad when they see their children again. They couldn't conveniently bring the children along, it appeared, because there are eleven of them.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Poison Proof Linguist

Mithridates the Great, (131-63 B.C.) King of Pontus, ruled over 23 nations and was able to converse with each of his subjects in his own idiom. In fact he is reputed to have mastered 25 languages to perfection.

All his life he studied poisons and their effects. Oriental rulers were always apprehensive of poison plots against their lives. Mithridates' interest in toxicology was probably motivated by the same fear. He is the inventor of Mithridate, which is composed of 72 ingredients, and which was long believed to be an universal antidote to every form of poison. He constantly took of this antidote.

Towards the end of his life, Mithridates, grieving over the repeated betrayal by his son Pharnaces, attempted to poison himself. But his system had become so inured to poison, that his attempt was unsuccessful, and he was compelled to call in one of his mercenaries, who despatched him with a sword.

The Three Dwellers

The Toborochos, a native tribe of Eastern Bolivia, are so named after the Indian name of the Bottle Tree. They live within the hollowed trunks of these gigantic trees, which remain unharmed by the hollowing out process. In this interior of Eastern Bolivia, there are entire villages, composed of these bizarre tree residences. There are always two tenants to each tree, as the trunk can be divided into two levels or floors. The interiors are furnished in a comparatively luxurious manner, comparing very favorably with the usual Indian habitation.

King George Sees Ship's Guns Wreck 'Queen Bee' Plane

One of Britain's high-flying robot "Queen Bee" planes was brought down into the sea on July 17 by anti-aircraft guns aboard the battleship Rodney.

King George, at Portsmouth for the Jubilee naval maneuvers, witnessed the destruction of the pilotless plane.

The Rodney's anti-aircraft battery is claimed to be the last word in Britain's defense against the possibility of a massed air attack, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

Meets Trials

The robot plane which can fly pilotless over a radius of 10 miles at a speed of 100 miles an hour and an altitude of 10,000 feet recently emerged from experimental stages and was one of the features of the recent Royal Air Pageant at Hendon.

The new plane, known as the "Queen Bee," looks externally like an ordinary light plane. The radio control apparatus is housed in the rear pilot's cockpit. The construction is of wood, so that if it be brought down on water it will float. As a seaplane it is launched into the air by catapult, and as a land plane it takes off from and lands on an airdrome. It is fitted with an aerial wire stretched between the wing-tips and the tail. The Queen Bee can fly at about 100 miles an hour and at heights up to 10,000 feet.

Spectacular in Flight

To the uninitiated onlooker the working of this radio plane is spectacular. An aircraftsman stands at the control box which looks like a tall phonograph case with a row of keys which he presses as the officer's orders are called to him.

On the tarmac 300 yards away was the plane. When the take-off was ordered it ran along gaining speed and took off perfectly. Two turning orders were then given which were duly executed.

Then came—"Climb . . . straight . . . glide . . . dive." At the last order, down it came to within 200 feet of the airdrome, when it flattened out and regained height in the orthodox way. It was revealed that such a maneuver could be regulated to any pre-arranged level and automatically carried out.

As an empty machine is not allowed to fly over the open country a pilot is always in the front cockpit, but he has nothing to do but sit as a passenger prepared to take over control if anything should go wrong.

The main use of the "Queen Bee" at present is to give gunners realistic opportunities for firing at an aerial target.

Prince Of Wales Visits St. Helier, Jersey County

Colonel W. Stocker.

Loyalty And Liberties

The streets, windows and roofs of buildings presented a wonderful sight as the Prince drove to the Royal Court House, where in the ancient States building, and before the 12 red-robed jurats and rectors, Deputies and constables of Jersey he received a loyal address of welcome.

The Prince took his place in the vacant bailiff's throne, there being no Bailiff of the island at the present time, and in his reply he said that he regretted his long-delayed first visit to this most ancient appanage to the Crown. Jersey had been loyal and faithful for 900 years, and that loyalty had not been misplaced, for Jersey today was still in possession of its ancient liberties. It was his earnest prayer that this would go on for ever. The Prince added:—"There are a great many ex-Service men in Jersey, not only those who served under my Royal Father, but many who were with our French Allies. Jersey will ever hold an honored place in our great Empire. I am delighted to have this opportunity to meet the citizens of Jersey."

After another loyal demonstration as he drove through crowded streets the Prince arrived at Springfield Grounds, where over 2,000 ex-Service men, including a contingent of Frenchmen, members of the Anciens Combattants de France, had gathered. The Prince passed every man on parade and asked Major-General E. H. Willis, a former Lieutenant-Governor, many questions about certain men's records. He spent 10 minutes conversing in fluent French with the French contingent, and smiled broadly as he greeted Soldat Bonny, who was a member of the guard of honor to King Edward in Paris in 1903. For several minutes he stood talking to Major T. F. Vernon Cooke, D.S.O., R.M.L.I., retired, who was the first man to land on the Mole at Zeebrugge from the Vindictive. Major Cooke was badly wounded in the head and leg.

After chatting for serveral minutes with disabled men, the Prince returned to the Royal dais, with the Lieutennt-Governor, and, to the great delight of the men and the large crowd, spoke through the microphone. He said it gave him the greatest pleasure to inspect so many old comrades, and added:—"I know a very great many men from these Islands served overseas, and we are proud to have with us on the right of line so many of our gallant French allies. The percentage of unemployment is very light here, and I hope it will always continue to be so. You have my very best wishes for continued prosperity and happiness."

Cheers were heartily given, and the great crowd sang "God bless the Prince of Wales" as the Prince stood at the salute.

Portrait Of The King

After an official luncheon at Government House the Prince spent half an hour at Victoria College, where he opened the Howard Hall and unveiled a painting of the King executed by Mr. John St. Helier Lander, who was born in Jersey. This ceremony was the primary object of the Prince's visit at the invitation of Mr. T. B. Davis, who presented to the college both the hall and the picture in memory of his son Howard, who was killed in the War. In a speech of thanks to the Prince Mr. Davis stated that the picture at the college was the original of the seven painted by Mr. Lander. Others had recently been unveiled in London. Mr. Davis asked the people of Jersey to accept the hall, the picture of his Majesty, and a replica of the famous clock at Greenwich in memory of his son.

To the 7,000 children of the Island assembled on the College Field the Prince said he would never forget his experience today. He added that he had asked that they might have a holiday tomorrow, and the children cheered and sang "God bless the Prince of Wales."

The day's program ended with a visit to Mont Orgeuil Castle, where nearly 1,000 representatives of the desidents in the Island were assembled and many presentations were made.

The Prince will leave for Guernsey by destroyer early tomorrow morning.

Campbell Takes Title In Sculling

Victory Gives Toronto Star The Right To Meet Rutherfurd And Vogt For Gold Cup

By DANIEL C. McCARTHY

N. Y. Times

PRINCETON, N. J., July 19.—Charles Campbell of the Argonaut Rowing Club of Toronto came up to expectations today by winning the single sculls championship of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen at the sixty-third annual regatta on Lake Carnegie.

The Toronto ace, who is 21 years old and did not take up sculling until slightly more than a year ago, defeated three star performers, Daniel H. Barrow Jr., Philadelphia champion; Henry Bugbee, Princeton University titleholder, and John F Coulson, a teammate.

Campbell, who holds the Canadian single sculls championship, rowed over the mile and a quarter course in 7:24.4 and had a margin of three lengths over Barrow, who was about eight lengths in front of Bugbee. At five-eighths of a mile Coulson caught a crab and was upset. By the time he was pulled out of the lake by officials and his craft righted, his opponents had nearly a quarter of a mile lead on him.

Gold Cup at Stake

By winning, Campbell qualified to meet Winthrop Rutherforo, 1934 champion, and Albert Vogt for the Philadelphia Gold Challenge Cup and world championship in the feature event of tomorrow's program. Vogt was titleholder in 1933.

Seven national champions were crowned today, and it remained for a group of hardy oarsmen from the West Side Rowing Club of Buffalo to row off with major honors. They won three titles after stirring competition while Philadelphia and Canadian competitors each won two.

The other Canadian who won a title was Jack Flavelle, who took the 145-pound senior single sculls by defeating Joseph Angyal of the Ravenswood Boat Club of Long Island City by slightly more than a length. This race, as were all the events of the day, was rowed over the mile and a quarter course.

Joe Ryan, defending champion from the New York Athletic Club, was third after a poor start.

West Side Makes Bid

The race of 145-pound senior four-oared crews with coxswains was a battle of rapidly changing fortunes. At the half mile, the Undine Barge Club of Philadelphia enjoyed a short-lived advantage.

Through the stages the West Side four stayed in second place, close to the leaders. The Buffalo outfit and Undine fought it out in the final 200 yards, and the up-Staters put on the pressure, a long beat of thirty-six giving them victory by three-quarters of a length in 7:06.2.

In the race for senior fours with coxswain the West Side Club again dominated the field. With Courtland Pierce setting a fast pace, the Buffalo four led from the opening gun and won from the New York A. C. by two and one-half lengths.

The Buffalo oarsmen climaxed their successful day by replacing the New York A. C. as champions in the intermediate eight-oared division. This was the closest race of the program.

New York A. C. Beaten

The Penn A. C. had spent itself in the early stages and the Undine Barge Club came up from last place to take second from the New York A. C., the Philadelphians skimming over the line a deck in front of the Winged Footers and two lengths behind the Buffalo eight.

With Barrow at stroke, the Penn A. C. senior double sculls crew was the only aggregation to retain its national championship. Barrow combined with Howard McGillin to defeat the West Side R. C. by one length after leading from the start.

The other title that went to oarsmen from the Schuykill was in the 145-pound senior quadruple sculls, which was won by the Malta Boat Club.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Dorse

This hybrid was born of a pony mare and a stag. Its nose, forehead, legs, hoofs, color and tail were those of a deer, while the rest of the body was that of a horse. At the time it was sketched, the "dorse" was 7 months old, and belonged to a gentleman farmer in the village of Bodenham near Salisbury, England.

Toronto Wins First, 4-0, Montreal Second, 7-0

N. Y. Herald Tribune

TORONTO, July 20—Two three-hit games were registered at Maple Leaf Stadium today when the Leafs and Montreal Royals divided a double-header. Toronto won the opener, 4—0, behind Earl Cook's three-hit effort, but the Royals came back in the nightcap as Pete Appleton chalked up his fifteenth pitching victory of the season by limiting the Leafs to three singles and won, 7—0.

Gordon Hinkle batted in three of the Leafs' runs in the first game, sending Boone across the plate with a single in th scond fram, and in the sixth he smacked a home run with Boone again on base. Tom Oliver hit a homer in the seventh.

Appleton mane sure of victory in the nightcap. He not only shut out the Leafs but hit a single and double, driving in two runs and scoring two himself.

The scores by innings:

Social and Personal Notes

TEACHERS PARTY

The Association of Foreign Teachers in Japan will enjoy a tea party at Dr. and Mrs. J. V. Martin's home No. 1008 Karuizawa on Saturday from 3:30 to 6 p.m.

AT KARUIZAWA

Dr. and Mrs. Leamoth of Yenching University of Peiping, are spending the rest of the season at Karuizawa and are staying at Dr. A. Oltmans's home, No. 1392 Karuizawa.

AT SUMMER RESORT

Mr. Sven Bach of Nojiri Lake is spending a few days in Karuizawa at Mr. C. P. Holmes No. 920.

KARUIZAWA MOVIES

A Movie Eve will be held at the Karuizawa Hall on Friday and Saturday, August 16 and 17, from 7 p.m., both days. The program will be Paramount News, Paramount Talkie Cartoon, "Wings in the Dark" and Das Lield Einer Nacht.

DINNER DANCE

The third and, it is expected, the most crowded dinner dance in August at Karuizawa will be held at the New Grand Lodge this Saturday from 9 p.m. Music will be furnished by the New Grand Orchestra.

CHIDREN'S CONCERT

The annual concert by children of the Karuizawa junior summer school will be held at 4 p.m. Friday at the Karuizawa auditorium.

RECEIVES CABLE

Mr. Paul Rusch of St. Paul's University was informed by cable Wednesday of the death of his mother, Mrs. Andrew Rusch at Louisville, Kentucky, on Sunday evening.

TO HOKKAIDO

The German Military Attache, Colonel Ott, left Tokyo Wednesday on an official trip to the Hokkaido.

SAILING FRIDAY

The Right Rev. Norman S. Binsted, acting director of St. Luke's International Medical Center, will sail for the United States on business for the hospital via the Empress of Canada Friday evening. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Binsted. Miss Christine Nuno of St. Luke's is also leaving on the same boat.

EMBROIDERY SALE

A bargain sale of Chinese embroidery will be held from today to the end of the month at the Omi Sales Co.'s show room, main street, Karuizawa. All work to be sold has been made by students in a Christian school for girls in Peiping. Profits of the sale will be given to the school.

BOAT ARRIVAL

The Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Japan sailed from Vancouver on Saturday, August 10 and is expected to arrive at Yokohama via Victoria and Honolulu on Saturday, August 24.

OFFICIAL CALL

Mr. Yosuke Matsuoka, new President of the South Manchuria Railway Company paid an official visit to Mr. Chuji Machida, the Commerce Minister at the latter's official residence at 11:10 a.m. Wednesday. He is reported to have exchanged views with the Minister regarding the strengthening of the Japan-Manchoukuo economic bloc and other problems relative to Japan's Manchoukuo policy.

ENTERTAINMENT AT SHIMONOSEKI

Count Hirotaro Hayashi, former President of the South Manchuria Railway Company, accompanied by his family, arrived at Shimonoseki Wednesday morning en route to Tokyo from Dairen.

After attending a reception held under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry at Moji, Count Hayashi left for Tokyo.

CHURCH SERVICE

There will be a celebration of Holy Communion at St. Anrew's church, Shiba, at 8 a.m. next Sunday.

ON WALKING TRIP

On a walking trip to Nikko from Karuizawa are Miss Charlotte Irwin, Miss Emmeline Throne, Mr. Dana Allen, and Arthur Throne.

TO KAMIKOCHI

Miss Sprowles and Miss Jost of Aoyama Gakuin have gone to Kamikochi from Karuizawa where they have been spending a part of the summer.

SAILING TODAY

Miss Marie Armstrong sailed at 3 p.m. today on the N.Y.K. liner Heian Maru for America, from Yokohama. She has been teaching at Waseda Seisoku Gakko.

PRINT EXHIBITION

At the Karuizawa hotel, prints by such artists as Hiroshige Utamaro and Hokusai are being shown. The exhibition will continue through Saturday.

RETURNING MONDAY

Mr. Karl E. Branstad of St. Paul's University will return Monday after a year's leave of absence spent at the College of St. Nicholas, Chislehurst, Kent, England. He is returning on the Yasukuni Maru which will dock in Kobe.

SCULPTOR DIES

Mr. Yoshio Maki, well known sculptor and member of the Nippon Bijutsu In or the Art Institute of Japan, died Wednesday at his home in Odawara, Kanagawa prefecture, at the age of 48. He was known for his unusual talent with Buddhist figures.

AT IMPERIAL

New arrivals at the Imperial Hotel are:

Mr. Carl Erik Necker, Mr. P. Hirschberger, Mrs. Van der Stegen, Mrs. J. M. Ovans, Mrs. Mase Jensen, Mrs. J. H. Schravello, Mr. O. Brancati, Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Healey, Master D. Healey, Mr. H. B. Quake Prophet's Predictions Good

Reuben Greenspan Of N.Y. City Amazes Editors With His Accuracy

Reuben Greenspan, the earthquake prophet, of Greenwich Village, New, York, rang the bell on another of his uncanny predictions on July 19 when the seismograph recorded a slight tremor in northeastern Japan. Greenspan, who jumped into sudden fame a few weeks ago when newspaper editors began to notice how often the "prophecies" he was sending them from time to time were coming true, had predicted a quake for July 19 "which will be severest in mid-Pacific with a strong possibility of tremors along the Pacific coast and in the orient."

The mid-Pacific is yet to be heard from, but the Japanese contribution was enough to run up another tally for Greenspan and convince his growing public anew that he is a prognosticator who knows what he is talking about, says the Chicago Tribune.

64 Shocks in Chile

Only the previous Friday the earth had trembled in far off Chile not once but 64 times, as if at the bidding of the "spare time" seismologist. Still another prophecy was borne out by a quake that shook the town of Trujillo near Lima Peru. While on June 14 the wires brought news of quakes in India and at Salinas, Cal., both happening on schedules laid down for them by the New Yorker.

It's really getting to be a habit with Greenspan, this warning the populace of quakes due to occur.

Recently friends of the prophet, who is a teacher of mathematics and navigation at the Seamen's institute, had occasion to remind any one interested that Greenspan several months ago had forecast volcanic eruptions in Mexico City for June 29.

Occur on Schedule

A week before news came from Batavia that the volcano Krakatao between Java and Sumatra had gone into action on Greenspan schedule and the cables brought word from Japan that 9 persons had been killed and 101 injured in a quake at Shizuoka.

Friends of the "village's most distinguished citizen at the moment submit that seldom in history has any prophet been corroborated by predicted "quakes" with such regularity and such precision. Some of them think he would have been burned at the stake as one leagued with the devil had he lived in the middle ages.

Warning of some of the temblors were outlined by him in a talk one day last week. After predicting several quakes which later occurred, he said:

Mr. Greenspan is 31 years old. He had been sending his predictions based on a "certain discovery" he made while studying the tides, to the newspapers for months but nobody paid any attention to them until they began to click too often to be overlooked.

NOTICE

From the 8th July 1935, the navigation dues, as provided in Article 7 of Rules of Navigation of the Suez Canal Company, will be charged at the rate of 7s. 6d., or 36.56 Egyptian piastres, per ton. At the present exchange, this fee is equal to 5.75 francs gold.

The navigation for steamers in ballast will be charged at the rate of 3s. 9d., or 18.28 Egyptian piastres, per ton.

Passengers' transit fare will be fixed at 10 francs gold.

Gold Extraction From Sea Closer By New Method

Hope Of Profitable Extraction Advanced By Professor Fick Of Columbia

At last year's meeting of the American Chemical Society, Thomas Midgley Jr., who produced knockless gasoline by the use of tetraethyl lead, predicted the tapping on a commercial scale of the estimated three-quadrillion-dollar treasure in pure gold known to exist in very dilute form in the waters of the seven seas He had based his prediction on the successful operation of a plant near Wilmington, N. C., for the extraction of bromine from sea water. Nevertheless practical chemists shook their heads doubtfully.

They justified their skepticism on the grounds of the enormous difference between the quantities of bromine and gold in the sea water, says the New York Times. Whereas bromine was present to the extent of 67 parts per million, or about an inch of bromine to the linear mile, they pointed out, the quantity of gold in sea water was in the ratio of 2.4 parts per billion. In other words, the amount of bromine was 30,000 times greater than the gold. On the other hand the market value of gold is 1,200 times that of bromine.

Only a year and three months have elapsed since Mr. Midgley's highly optimistic prediction, yet science nowadays travels at such a pace as to bring the prediction considerably closer to reality.

Professor Colin G. Fink, head of the Division of Electrochemistry, Columbia University, one of the world's leading electrochemists, after thirty years of experiments and research has hit upon one of the main obstacles in the way of the extraction of gold and the many other precious metals that are known to exist in enormous quantities in the sea. The gold particles, or ions, that carry a positive charge of electricity, are unable to get close enough to be deposited on the negative electrode, or the cathode, because the alkaline film surrounding the cathode is too thick.

Dr. Fink has found a method of reducing this alkaline film to the proper thickness. By applying this method he has actually succeeded in extracting a quantity of gold from a solution in which the metal's concentration was decidedly less than 1 part per million.

Hopes of recovering billions from the seas, Dr. Fink cautions, "must be dispelled for the present, as the cost is about five times the value of the gold recovered." Nevertheless, elaborating on his original address published in the current issue of Science, he pointed out a practical method by which limited quantities of gold and other precious metals in the sea water could be extracted on a profitable basis.

Dr. Fink's method is based on the discovery that the thickness of the alkaline film around the cathode can be reduced by rotating the cathode at high speed. The higher the velocity, he found, the better the recovery from gold solutions containing as little as one part per million.

In a typical experiment a 5-centimeter diameter nickel disk cathode was used, spinning at the rate of 3,500 revolutions per minute in three liters of a 3 per cent salt solution containing three miligrams of gold. More than 90 per cent of the gold was plated out at the end of half an hour.

"It will be appreciated," Dr. Fink points out, "that the gold concentration toward the end of this period was decidedly less than one part per million."

The reason the method is for the present not yet commercially practicable on a large scale, as Dr. Fink points out, is because the cost of rotating the cathode is five times the value of the gold. But, Dr. Fink added, there is nothing in the present state of knowledge to prevent every liner on the high seas from "using its propellers as cathodes and plating them with gold in the course of a voyage."

In this case the gold would be merely a by-product, and could be produced at only a slight cost by running a small current between the propellers, with an anode, or positive electrode, in the form of a wire dropped overboard in the wake.

This, by the way, may serve as a suggestion to the naval powers of the world as a possible means of making their warships pay at least in part for the high cost of operation in peacetime, or even in war, for that matter, by literally churning the gold out of the sea water.

There are certain waters of the world, such as in the fjords in Norway, where the gold concentration is much higher than in others. If a cheap source of power could be developed at such places, it might become commercially feasible to construct stationary gold recovery plants. It must not be forgotten that even five years ago a stationary plant for the extraction of bromine from sea water was still regarded as highly visionary.

"I don't think," Professor Fink is quoted as saying, "that the day when gold can be recovered from sea water in commercial quantities is so far away."

The film of the cathode can be regulated as to its thickness, and as to its alkalinity, by various chemical means, Dr. Fink states, but none of these is so simple and direct as the procedure of changing the speed of the rotating cathode and then its current destiny. Dr. Fink and his associates at Columbia are operating their cathodes at speeds as high as 15,000 revolutions per minute, with current densities of 250 to 500 amperes per square foot.

In this way, Dr. Fink reported, "desired results have been obtained in short order, as compared with long, tedious, 'hit or miss' methods of the past."

Credit for the pioneering work in this field is given by Dr. Fink to Edgar Fahs Smith, eminent American chemist, who died in 1928. In 1901, while experimenting on the separation of tungsten from molybdenum, Dr. Smith came upon the idea of the rotating anode. Dr. Fink substituted the rotating cathode for Dr. Smith's rotating anode.

On the basis of numerous experimental results, Dr. Fink reports the following discoveries, which, he believes, will play an important part not only in the extraction of precious metals from sea water but in the making of alloys, both old and new, which are playing such an important part in modern industry.

He found that a cathode-film is essential for successful metal deposition, but that this film must be held within fairly definite limits as to thickness and as to alkalinity. Furthermore, that this film can be maintained within these limits most easily by the rotating cathode method, a definite cathode speed and a cathode current-density corresponding to the desired film thickness and film alkalinity.

Non-Explosive, Solid Gasoline Big Aid In War

'Solene' Developed After 16 Years Of Research By New York Chemist

For many years chemists and fuel engineers in many lands have tried to develop a process for converting the highly inflammable liquid gasoline into a non-explosive solid form. The extent of the research is indicated by the fact that more than 200 patents have been granted for solid fuels. None of these, however, was found to be efficient when put to the test, according to Dr. Alexander Klemin, director of the Daniel Guggenheim School of Aeronautics at New York University.

On July 7 a demonstration was held at the Guggenheim school which suggests at last a method has been discovered for producing a non-explosive solid gasoline which would have as its chief advantage the elimination of the fire hazard in air travel.

The new solid gasoline, called "solene," has been developed after sixteen years of research by Dr. Adolph Prussin, New York chemist, according to the New York Times. If the preliminary tests are to be taken as a criterion, he has succeeded in producing a solidification of gasoline readily usable in internal combustion engines at a cost said to be less than one cent a gallon above ordinary liquid fuel.
